INSPECTOR GENERAL
DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
4800 MARK CENTER DRIVE
ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA 22350-1500

The Honorable Lisa Murkowski
United States Senate
709 Hart Senate Building
Washington, D.C. 20510-0203

MAY 2 1 2014

Dear Senator Murkowski:

This is in response to your letter dated June 19, 2013, regarding allegations that the command climate within the Alaska National Guard (AKNG) is not conducive to reporting and investigating sexual assaults and that, in some instances, officials may have taken steps to cover up incidents of sexual assault.

Our letter of July 18, 2013, indicated that the DoD Hotline referred the allegations to the Department of the Army Inspector General (Army IG) for action (case number 20130620-014429). Our letter of March 6, 2014, indicated that officials within the Directorate for Investigations of Senior Officials (ISO) opened case number 20130715-014791-CASE-01 to monitor the senior official investigation by the Army IG.

On April 15, 2014, the Army IG completed the investigation and forwarded the Report of Investigation to ISO officials for review. The Army IG investigation found AKNG command climate sensing sessions did not identify concerns regarding sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting, and that The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents.

The Army IG report noted the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, AKNG, received reports of 11 alleged sexual assault incidents (since February 2012) and promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities. Alaska State Statute, "Military Code of Alaska," Section 26.05, dictates that Alaska state civilian law enforcement authorities investigate, and the Alaska civilian criminal system prosecute, cases involving AKNG member suspects. The TAG took adverse administrative action on the only two cases upon which he could act; those which substantiated sexual assault allegations against AKNG members. In one case, the TAG discharged the subject from the AKNG, and in the other, he initiated the subject's separation.

On May 6, 2014, ISO Oversight Branch officials completed a review of the Army IG investigation and concurred with the findings and conclusions.

Should you have questions, please contact me at 703-604-8324.

Sincerely,

Larry D. Turner
Acting Assistant Inspector General for Communications and Congressional Liaison

CONFIDENTIAL AND DELIBERATIVE

Mike

For informational purpose, attached is a letter from the Anchorage District Attorney's office explaining their reasoning to decline prosecution in the sexual assault case [redacted]

[redacted] DP/EP

The case did not support the criteria for criminal prosecution. There are no longer any criminal actions to pursue, [redacted] DP/EP [redacted]

This is just information to let you know that we are receiving good support from both law enforcement and from the DA's office and this process is quite lengthy.

Re: Alaska National Guard Investigation Number [redacted] BOI/PR

Major General Katkus:

I am writing this letter to summarize my review of the viability of possible sexual assault charges for an incident that occurred between BOI/PR and BOI/PR on March 28, 2010. As the supervisor of the special assault unit of the Anchorage District Attorney's Office, I am primarily responsible for evaluating and screening alleged sexual assaults that are reported in the Municipality of Anchorage.

I received a copy of the material compiled during the course of the investigation dated 14 January 2014, and I have reviewed the material included in that file in arriving at the following determination. For the reasons stated below, I have determined that there are no viable Alaska criminal charges that could be pursued in this matter.

The purpose of my review was to determine whether criminal charges are warranted against BOI/PR I evaluated the possibility of charging him with sexual assault in the first degree, a violation of AS 11.41.410(a)(1) or alternatively with sexual assault in the second degree, a violation of AS 11.41.420(a)(2).

Synopsis of Pertinent Facts

On March 28, 2010, BOI/PR went out socializing with friends. She had recently been deployed to BOI/PR with the alleged perpetrator, BOI/PR BOI/PR went to dinner with a female colleague and reported consuming one beer with her meal. She and her colleague then went to another establishment where she consumed some more alcohol. She was unable to report exactly how much alcohol she had consumed during the course of the evening, but admitted to being intoxicated. During the course of the evening, BOI/PR also took some of her prescription of Wellbutrin – a narcotic that she reported heightened the impact of the alcohol she consumed.

BOI/PR then returned to her house with her friend and sent BOI/PR a text message inviting him over to the house. BOI/PR accepted the invitation and arrived shortly thereafter. The three of them consumed some additional wine, but BOI/PR indicated that BOI/PR did not seem intoxicated. BOI/PR had been recently divorced and during the conversation, she began to talk about missing having someone in the bed with her to "spoon" with. She invited BOI/PR to "spoon" with her that night, but she reported that she thought BOI/PR understood she didn't want to engage in any sexual activity. There is no indication that any discussion was had regarding the limits of the "spooning" action.

BOI/PR and BOI/PR went to bed together in BOI/PR s room. BOI/PR took off her pants and left on her underwear, bra and tank-top shirt. BOI/PR and BOI/PR were lying in the bed "snuggled up" next to each other. BOI/PR stated that she fell asleep and woke up sometime later to BOI/PR "tugging hard" on her underwear. BOI/PR said she tensed up her body, but did not move or say anything to BOI/PR She said she made "a noise" and he stopped doing what he was doing. After some time passed, BOI/PR fully removed her underwear, lifted her top leg, digitally penetrated her and then had sexual intercourse with her. She reported that despite her desire to make BOI/PR stop, she did not say anything or actively resist him in any way. She believes she may have "mumbled out 'I don't want to,'" but is unsure if BOI/PR heard it. BOI/PR ultimately stopped after he ejaculated.

The next morning, BOI/... got out of bed to take a shower and BOI/PR left the house. BOI/PR made a passing comment to her female colleague that morning about the incident, but did not say anything in detail. At work, BOI/PR acted as though nothing happened between them and didn't say anything about the event. Ultimately, on March 29, 2010, BOI/PR anonymously reported that she had been sexually assaulted and underwent a sexual assault examination.

During the examination, she was asked about any prior sexual history she had with BOI/PR and she said that they did not have any prior sexual relationship. She later informed the military investigator that while deployed in BOI/PR with BOI/PR she once consensually performed oral sex on him and they had kissed. On January 13, 2013, BOI/PR asked that the anonymous report be unsealed and the case be further evaluated for possible criminal charges.

When BOI/PR was questioned regarding his view of the March 28th incident, he declined to make a statement.

Legal Analysis

In order to prove the offense of sexual assault in the first degree, a violation of AS 11.41.410(a)(1), the state must prove that the defendant sexually penetrated the victim "without consent" and that he was at least reckless as to the victim's lack of consent.

"Without consent" is defined as "with or without resisting, [the victim] is coerced by the use of force against a person or property, or by express or implied threat of death, imminent physical injury, or kidnapping to be inflicted on anyone." Here, there is no evidence that BOI/PR used any level of force, either implied or explicitly, against BOI/... in order to complete the act of sexual penetration. BOI/PR claims that she mumbled something to him to try to get him to stop, but she is not even sure if he heard her. In short, there is insufficient evidence to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that BOI/PR ever displayed any lack of consent. Thus, it would not be possible to prove even the reckless standard of mens rea as to BOI/PR disregard for her lack of consent. Therefore, because there is insufficient evidence to prove the mens rea and insufficient evidence to prove the expressed or implied use of force, the charge of sexual assault in the first degree is not viable in this matter.

In order to prove the offense of sexual assault in the second degree, a violation of AS 11.41.420(a)(2), the state must prove that the defendant had sexual intercourse with a person that was incapacitated and that the defendant knew the person was incapacitated. Pursuant to Alaska law, "a person is "incapacitated" if the person is temporarily incapable of appraising the nature of the person's own conduct or physically unable to express unwillingness to act."

Here, although it could be reasonably inferred that the act began while BOI/PR was still asleep, any actus reus that constitutes the offense was committed while BOI/PR was in fact conscious. Additionally, even though she describes essentially "freezing" during the episode and being "unable to unable to express unwillingness to [have sex]," she was not physically unable to do so. Finally, there is insufficient evidence in this case to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that BOI/PR acted knowingly with regard to any "incapacitation" BOI/PR experienced. Therefore, the offense of sexual assault in the second degree could not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt under Alaska law.

For all of the aforementioned reasons, the state will not pursue criminal charges against BOI/PR for his sexual contact with BOI/PR on March 28, 2010.

Awesome, thanks Cindy!!

You hit everything on my list – below are items that were approved for the Governor to review that I don't believe we've seen back yet (please correct me if I've missed one). I know Tara/Julia were coordinating reprinting some of the items this week.

ACA bullets
Critical habitat areas bullets
Medicaid response to student – BOI
BOI – Nikiski High student letter
AKARNG DVSA responses to constituents – BOI and Sharnbroich

Okay … as far as my account shows … I'm caught up on proofing! Yeah!! ☺ So if your records show that I have others outstanding, you'll need to resend it to me.

Thanks ☺ And sorry to put so much onto Tara at one time ☹ But hopefully we can get it all signed in the next couple of days. If we don't – let me know Wednesday. He may need to take some of it to Fairbanks with him to work on.

Here are the documents I received and I asked that they only provide me with documents I was legally able to have. From what I'm being told, between the first signature of agreement to recommendations to the second, there was always a meeting with Gen. Katkus or his attorney, Baylor.

As to the survey – if someone received 1200 pages of a survey – wouldn't that include responses? I can't imagine the survey itself being 1200 pages. Is the entire survey itself with responses a public record?

Thanks for your help in all of this. I'm trying to help keep the credibility of your assessment intact for this process.

Sorry, I apologize for my wording - the report was the written statement from someone who had found out about the survey responses being released to the generals.

I just talked to General Katkus - they have received the survey with responses. It was requested by General Bridges and it came from support@deocs.net with phone numbers of BOI. General Katkus when he was reading this to me was surprised that these are "commercial" numbers.

He did confirm that there are 1200 pages and a lot of information as to the responses. It went to three of them (he, General Bridges and anther general that I did not write the name down).

Give me a call when you get a chance. And I did send another email earlier with two attachments on the other issue we had discussed.

Cindy, let me clarify, you note below, "[T]his is the report I just received," I did not receive any report. Our email system can be a challenge so you may have to resend. The survey was provided online to every AK NG member with a password to access. If you would like a copy of the survey w/o answers I can get it for you but it will take me a day or so. However, every AK NG member would necessarily have had access the questions....but not the answers. Only NGB and DEOMI have the responses. Every survey operates this way - members must have the questions to complete the survey. McMahon works for NGB, is part of the team and a JAG. She does have the survey results - she has not shared them. Does this answer your questions?

Where is the survey that I can go look at it or someone who took the survey? Are all surveys public?

So is McMahon part of DEOMI?

Thanks Cindy, he just called and said DEMOI sent him a link - he sent it to me - despite what DEMOI told us they sent a link with the results to several GOs in the AK NG. We are trying to shut it down now but it is not easy as DEOMI is in FL and it's 5pm. Will work it. I asked the TAG not to distro any further.

Cindy, addressing the survey first, it would make sense that a 1200 page survey included the responses. Out survey consists of 8 surveys in total (one for each major element of the AK NG although it is all the same survey) and is about 1350 pages. It would be helpful for us to know the date of the survey to know if it was ours. Can you get a copy? I will look at the documents you just sent and get back to you.

I have asked Katkus to go to the other two generals who received emails and to pull it back and to ask that they not review it at this time. He said he would do so. He was also putting together a team to start reviewing this and trying to decipher the 1200 pages. He will hold off on that.

Thanks, Chris ... appreciate your help. I did realize no names are listed with the responses - the concern from those calling is that some responses are so detailed, the writer would be able to be determined by their superiors. I think we have lost some credibility through this, but I'm trying to reassure folks that your agency is separate and is in control of the outcome of the assessment.

I also know from General Katkus reading the email to me, that General Bridges requested the survey - that may have been why it was automatically sent. I'm not sure why he or anyone else would have been requesting it. My other concern is that they obviously were talking about it since folks knew he received it and thus called me.

Anyway, hopefully you have a nice relaxing weekend planned and you are able to enjoy it!

Cindy, we were able to make contact with DEOMI and the they are working on shutting down the access now, will monitor to check the status. BL: the DEOMI computers set an automated process in motion that neither the people we work with at DEOMI or our team were aware of. This is frustrating but will not impact our report. Additionally, the surveys that our team has looked at thus far (and we will look at all of them) do not identify the survey participant. We will pay close attention to the typed narrative entries to determine if they could reasonably identify the participant and be guided accordingly. One last note, I took a quick look at the two files you sent and I need to do some homework. More to follow.
If you wish to discuss pls feel free to give me a ring on the cell.

The Honorable Gary Folger
Commissioner
Department of Public Safety
5700 East Tudor Road
Anchorage, AK 99507

Dear Commissioner Folger,

I read with deep concern the audit report from Aviation Risk Solutions, Inc. (ARS), as it pointed out a number of glaring deficiencies in the Department of Public Safety (DPS) Aviation Section's practices that put people and equipment at risk. We must be very aggressive in evaluating issues raised by ARS and in addressing the deficiencies.

DPS has already been discussing a way forward, but please assure we have a team, led by yourself, with sufficient experience and competence to evaluate the audit findings. If needed, we should look outside DPS for professional help in specialized areas. Please also put together, if it has not already been done, a plan to address the deficiencies. Obviously, if one or more of the deficiencies pose or likely pose an immediate risk to life or safety, take action now to avoid that tragic outcome.

I know that you share and have lived the vision that DPS Aviation must be safe, reliable, and meet or exceed standards to carry out the DPS mission. I will work with you to make this happen. Please contact Janice Mason to schedule time during the week of June 16th to brief me and the Chief of Staff on progress.

Thank you,

Sean Parnell
Governor

Major General Scott Gorske
Assistant to the Chairman for National Guard Matters
Office of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

Dear General Gorske,

I learned last Friday that results of the National Guard Bureau's Command Climate Survey of the Alaska National Guard were released to Alaska Guard leadership. The release of this information by the Guard Bureau, however it happened, is totally contrary to my understanding from the Guard Bureau about how the assessment would be conducted and how information would be communicated with me.

Where I had asked for a review of the entire sexual assault reporting system of the Alaska National Guard, and other areas, and where that review was to include a review of the command structure, this premature release of information to the Alaska Guard command structure is deeply troubling and raises several important issues. Namely, I want to ensure the privacy of Guard members who responded to the survey. I also want to assure continuation of an objective, credible review of the sexual assault (and other) reporting, investigation, and adjudication system. This includes a review of the command structure's role in that system. The goal is to assure cases will be investigated and adjudicated fairly and impartially and that appropriate sanctions will be carried out.

Premature release of the Command Climate Survey has raised concern for potential retaliation, because some Guard members perceive their comments in the survey can be traced back to them. Where I had already asked for a review of the command structure and the part it regularly plays in reviewing cases and proposed sanctions, and where the early release of the Command Climate Survey to Guard leadership may have chilled some claimants' or victims' willingness to report and be interviewed, I make a new request of the Guard Bureau.

I ask you to authorize a National Guard Bureau panel to hear, review, and adjudicate cases from the Alaska National Guard's investigation team and existing reporting system. Our Guard leadership should not be subjected to the cloud it has been put under by the early release of the survey, and our Guard members need to have every confidence in a full, fair, and impartial hearing, including sanctions, if warranted. At minimum, the panel should be authorized to hear all cases pending until the review is complete.

I strongly believe that under the circumstances, we must have an independent review of cases once the investigator and the team bring them forward, at least until your assessment is complete and any remedial action, if required, is fulfilled. Please feel free to call me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

ATTENTION OF

June 10, 2014

Chief Counsel, National Guard Bureau

Governor Sean Parnell
STATE CAPITOL
P.O. Box 110001
Juneau, AK 99811-0001

Dear Governor Parnell,

This letter responds to yours of June 9, 2014, to Major General Scott Gorske wherein you communicated your disappointment with the release of the climate assessment results pertaining to the Alaska National Guard and you requested additional support from the National Guard Bureau to adjudicate pending administrative cases. General Gorske forwarded your letter to me for response, and I am responding on behalf of the National Guard Bureau as General Gorske's mission is strictly limited to the ongoing Alaska National Guard assessment. This letter will address each of your concerns and provide a brief update on the status of the assessment.

My entire team shares your frustration with the release of the command climate survey results. As I am sure you are aware, we highly value the confidentiality and impartiality of the entire assessment process, of which the command climate survey was one component. We have learned that the survey was released by the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute through a computer-generated process. They are an independent entity of the Department of Defense with extraordinary expertise in developing and implementing command climate surveys. The National Guard Bureau assessment team worked with the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute to not only craft the survey questions, but also to initiate the survey and process the survey results. These results became available on the closing of the survey through email links and passwords provided to our office. Unfortunately and unbeknownst to us, the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute technology systems automatically sent a link and password to Major General Thomas Katkus as the senior Alaska National Guard commander. This should not have occurred, and we are currently reviewing the narrative portions of the survey to determine whether it may be possible to identify any of the respondents. We will keep your staff informed in this regard.

The second part of your letter requests that the National Guard Bureau provide a panel to review or adjudicate open files. Your staff has made it clear that your primary concern is the fair and impartial treatment of all concerned; that is our primary concern as well. Briefly, we are aware that there are several pending enlisted separation actions. These cases are initiated by lower level commanders with the recommendation to a convening authority, such as Brigadier General Bridges, and the Adjutant General as the separation authority. Separation panel members are typically selected from the membership of the Alaska National Guard and make findings and recommendations to both the convening authority and the separation authority. The National Guard Bureau could provide panel members. That said, we have no indication that Alaska National Guard separation panels have failed in any way in the execution of their responsibilities. After discussions with your staff, we believe that you are asking the National Guard Bureau to provide temporary general officer command leadership to resolve open cases. Adjudicating cases requires state command authority, however, and it appears Alaska law prescribes that officers must be a member of the Alaska National Guard for a period of five (5) years before they may be appointed as general officers/ commanders. Accordingly, Alaska law precludes the National Guard Bureau from supporting your request in that manner.

We do believe that there are other mechanisms which may be employed to ensure the fair and impartial administration of Alaska National Guard separation actions. We recommend that you direct the Alaska National Guard to provide you or a member of your staff with a weekly/biweekly summary update on certain administrative/disciplinary actions before final action is taken. More specifically, we recommend that your staff receive and review summary information pertaining to the separation board documentation, to include the chain of command's and board's recommendations, and the leadership's rationale in cases where the board's recommendations for separation are not followed. Summary information will ensure compliance with federal record requirements.

Should you so desire, I am willing to provide a senior Judge Advocate to assist your office in answering any process questions that you may have. Additionally, I recommend that you establish written "Critical Information Requirements" similar to that which a military commander uses to ensure they have situational awareness over certain high visibility issues which must be immediately reported. These are referred to as "Commander's Critical Information Requirements."

With the exception of the release of the survey information noted above, the assessment is proceeding well and on schedule. Our team did identify procedural issues on several pending separation actions and assisted in rectifying these issues. Additionally, we are providing a senior level attorney along with a Judge Advocate captain to assist the Alaska Army National Guard Judge Advocate assigned to the separation panels in the performance of his duties. Currently these separation panels are scheduled for late July/August.

The National Guard Bureau stands ready to assist you any way we can. Should you have any questions or comments, please do not hesitate to contact me at anytime.

Sincerely,

RE: Notice of Appearance
Notice of Demand to Pay Legal Expenses
Request for a Protective Order

Dear Major General Katkus:

This letter shall be deemed a formal notice of appearance by this law firm as an attorney on behalf of the victim of egregious misconduct by senior leaders of the Alaska Army National Guard. I represent BOI/... BOI/PR who was falsely accused, BOI/PR of rape. After one of the most comprehensive criminal sexual assault investigations, by highly trained and skilled civilian law enforcement officers in the history of the State of Alaska, it was determined the allegations against BOI/PR BOI/PR were "unprovable" and that "reasonable cause to believe that a crime occurred did not exist". BOI/PR BOI/PR was never arrested. Yet, now, as part of a politically motivated witch-hunt, this BOI/PR year-old debunked accusation has been found by a National Guard Officer to be evidence of improper conduct warranting BOI/PR

Despite senior leaders in the Alaska National Guard knowing about the false sexual assault allegations for BOI/PR years, nothing was done. It was only when BOI/PR got upset that BOI/PR couldn't implicate BOI/PR in an investigation that the target was placed on BOI/PR 's back and old allegations were turned into something they are not. When BOI/PR spoke with BOI/PR about BOI/PR 's inability to assist in her investigation, BOI/PR was called immediately thereafter into BOI/PR BOI/PR s office and spoken to in an unprofessional manner. If BOI/PR was subject to the UCMJ, we would be filing an Article 138 complaint against him and BOI/PR for violations of UCMJ Articles 92, 133, and 134. His attempt to intimidate BOI/PR into cooperating against BOI/PR by engaging in perjury was not well received by my client. After this encounter, BOI/PR was informed that the BOI/PR year old debunked rape allegations would now be investigated by the National Guard despite being cleared by highly skilled rape investigators in the civilian police department. The timing of BOI/PR 's involvement in a lawful investigation and the retaliation to which he was subjected, by using false sexual assault claims to BOI/PR smack of clear violations of the Military Whistleblower Protection Act.

The charges against BOI/PR only happened because of his cooperation or lack thereof into allegations involving BOI/PR . As such, we hereby notify you that BOI/PR is a "military whistleblower" as defined by 10 USC 1034. We are requesting a detailed investigation into the actions of BOI/PR (ensure he is made aware that Alaska is a one party audio recording state and I will use all available legal evidence to impeach his testimony that he did not attempt to get BOI/PR to change his sworn testimony) and what information he provided BOI/PR and when.

Let me assure you that the full power and resources of this law firm will be placed behind our client to ensure he is vindicated and the improper conduct of senior leaders in the Alaska National Guard are exposed.

Request for a General Order Forbidding Retaliation

Alaska has assigned BOI/PR a military attorney who is senior rated by BOI/PR I am concerned that BOI/PR will not receive effective assistance of counsel in this matter without the Adjutant General issuing an order to protect, not only BOI/PR 's attorney from retaliation for zealous representation but, all witnesses in this matter from being subjected to any adverse action or otherwise harassed because of their assistance to the defense. I am also very concerned by published statements that you have made; such as "I am responsible for ensuring all personnel aggressively root out any harassment, hostile work environments, sexual assault or trading of sexual favors" (http://www.alaskastar.com/Alaska-Star/November-Issue-1-2013/Alaska-National-Guard-takes-sexual-assault-seriously/), which seems to a reasonable person to be "unlawful command influence" into how to handle a BOI/PR year old false claim of rape. If you do not issue an order to protect our military JAG and others who want to assist our defense from retaliation and we lose this matter, I will be appealing and seeking a finding of inefficient assistance of legal counsel and the intentional creating of a hostile environment for the defense by a command climate that is politically polarized against my client's due process rights based on your conduct.

Pro Hac Vice

While this matter will be handled out of our Washington DC office, the issue of proper licensing could be an issue. To the extent that this matter is controlled in part by the Alaska Military Code, I would like to learn the procedures, rules, and regulations to be admitted Pro Hac Vice to 2nd chair the legal proceedings in this matter. I believe Alaska Military Code Section 26.05.310, 26.05.320, and 26.05.340 allow the Adjutant General to issue such admission to practice law restricted to this matter when we send a team of attorneys, investigators and media relation personnel to Alaska.

Payment of Legal Fees

This will serve as official notice that our law firm plans to seek recovery, of our legal fees, for our services from the State General Fund according to Alaska Military Code Section 26.05.330(h). As no case-law exists on this issue, we hope that you do not choose to make case-law with this matter as we are confident that we will prevail as BOI/PR is being subject to civil penalties because of "an act the member performed or committed or an act the member caused, ordered or directed to be done or performed in furtherance of and while in the performance of the member's military duty". It is requested that we be provided with the necessary vouching forms and procedures for submittal of our monthly bills for payment. Based on our prior representation of clients in similar situations, we expect our legal fees to be as little as $150,000, and if this matter requires hearings and boards, to exceed

$1,000,000.00. As allowed by United States Department of Justice rules and federal case-law, we will discount our rates to the "Laffey" rates so our attorneys will have hourly rates of between $393 and $771 per hour. Our Paralegals, Law Clerks, and Investigators will be $175 per hour. Our media relations, marketing, and government affairs personnel will be $150 per hour. See: http://www.laffeymatrix.com/see.html

Additional Allegations and Requests

CPT Jennifer King and I have agreed, and our client has consented, to her acting as "1st Chair" in this matter. As such, this notice is not meant to be an all-encompassing notice. She will be submitting a formal request for an extension of time to respond to upcoming deadlines. We hope that minor issues like that are not denied compounding our due process issues.

Respectfully submitted,

Mathew B. Tully, Esq.
On behalf of Tully Rinckey PLLC

Plane just touched down in Anchorage. Had very spotty coverage out in Galena. Last night when I left McHugh I had directed him to get BG Bridges and Brig Gen O'Brien together this morning and get started on this project. I will check with him next on how this effort went.

I had directed that I wanted to produce a new and separate weekly report, specifically addressing any Alaska National Guard military administrative/disciplinary actions and that I wanted this report to include all allegation, initiated action, recommended punishment, board action, and final command decision; that it be updated every week, and that each category include summary information to justify why each action was made.

I directed that the first report is due to me on Monday, June 16.

Because I'm leaving to Mongolia on Sunday, at 7am, I directed that I must have the first draft of this report on Saturday night and that this first report should include all military administrative/disciplinary actions we have taken during this administration.

Not sure I'm breaking any body's neck, but I know they will be working late tonight and all day Saturday to get this done. They should easily have this information available as I believe we already are tracking all this. There will be some differences between the two services but nothing significant. Either way, I'll have a product for you to review tomorrow night.

This will provide a starting point and you can adjust fire from there and provide any additional direct oversight the Governor will desire. I will try to make sure we get you a product that provides all the information needed so that this additional level of scrutiny, review, and approval is accomplished without proportionately weighing down or slowing further, the existing mountain of bureaucratic due process already established by DoD, NGB, union, or Federal Technician regulations and policies, not to mention the new Army Regulation specifically updated to limit commanders from certain decisions on discipline without the Secretary of Defense specific review and approval.

I've shortened my travel plans by canceling my attendance at AGAUS in Oklahoma, so after my commitments in Mongolia, I will be returning directly back here to Anchorage. You had asked me to talk to you before I do anything crazy. I will get on your calendar as soon as I get back to town.

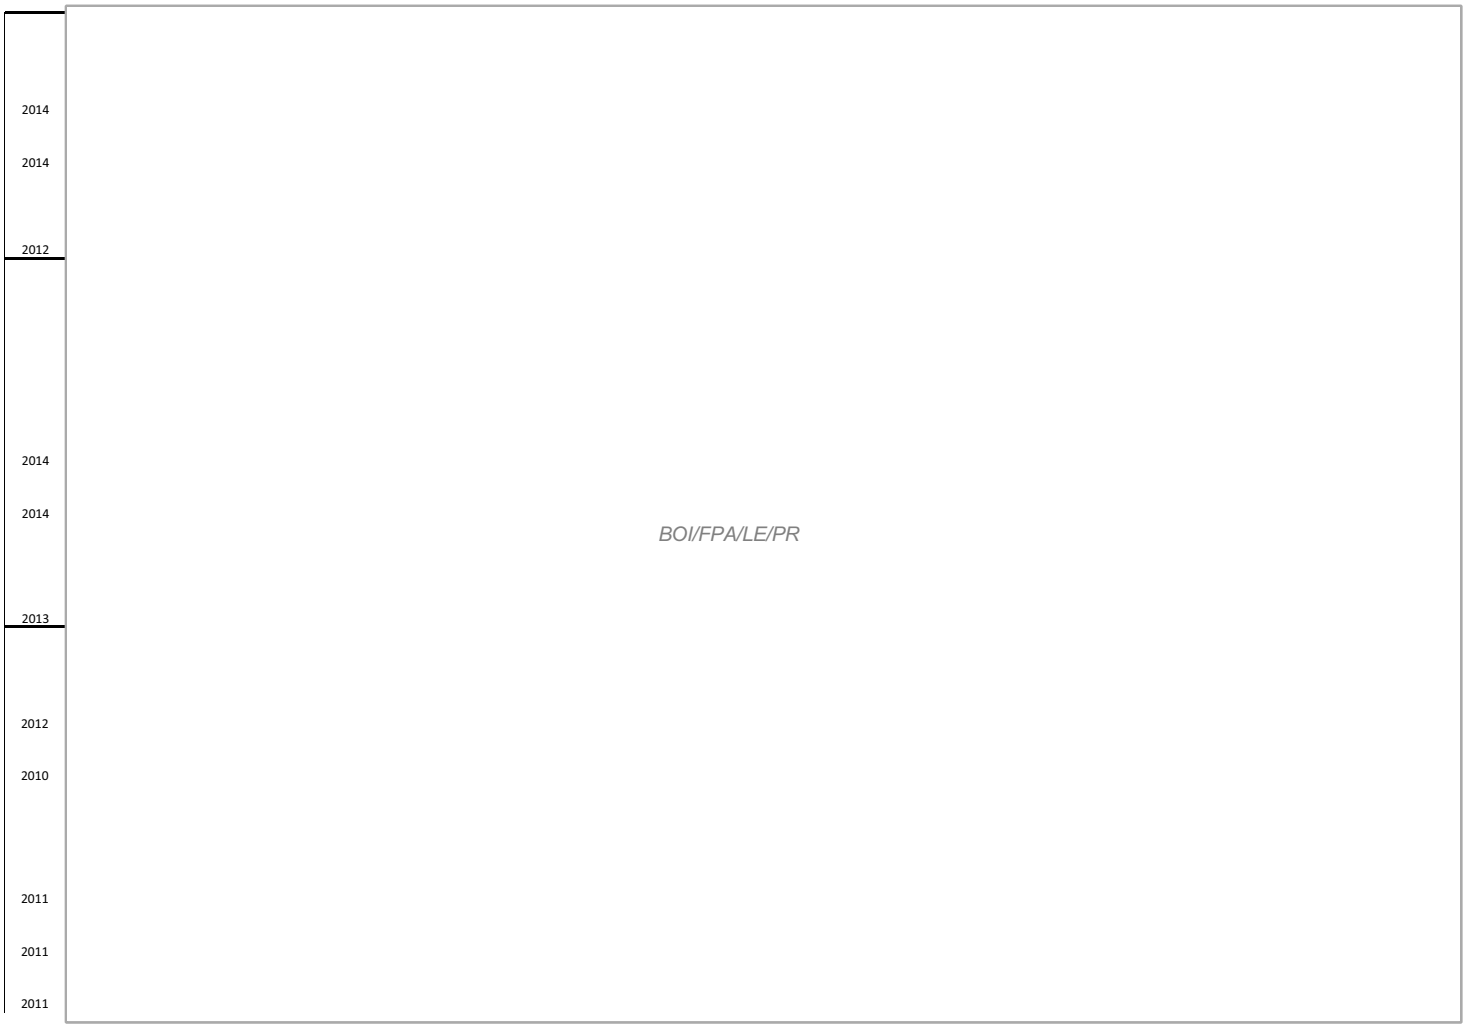
Hi Cindy,



The attached document is what I provided to BG Jorgensen. It is the information that the Governor is requesting. She's consolidating the two main Army units as well as the Air Guard information. I mentioned to her that this document does not contain anything on the numerous 15-6 investigations from the large filing cabinet that is under lock and key in her office area. However, OCI was given a spreadsheet listing the type and nature of those investigations. I doubt that info will be provided to your office. I think I have that spreadsheet on digits if you want it.

The 15-6 investigations are command-directed investigations to look into an allegation of misconduct. The investigating officers (IOs) are appointed in writing and given a suspense. After a consult with a lawyer, they go out and obtain sworn statements from victims/witnesses. The conclude with a summary of their findings and make recommendations to the Appointing Authority who may accept or modify the IO's recommendations.

Murkowski Calls for VA Investigation, Transparency in Alaska

With Reports of Retaliation in Anchorage and Concerns Surrounding Wasilla Clinic, Senator Demands Answers

WASHINGTON, DC — Senator Lisa Murkowski today called for a thorough, swift and independent investigation of alleged scheduling irregularities within the Alaska VA system and a full response to the longstanding concerns surrounding the Wasilla Community Based Outpatient Clinic (CBOC). In a letter (attached) to the Department of Veterans Affairs Inspector General, Murkowski is pressing them to "expedite an inquiry into two matters related to the Alaska VA Healthcare System."

After a New York Times report<http://www.nytimes.com/2014/06/16/us/va-punished-critics-on-staff-doctors-assert.html?hpw&rref=us> citing a former Anchorage VA physician alleging scheduling irregularities and a Mat-Su Frontiersman editorial<http://www.frontiersman.com/opinions/editorials/valley-veterans-review-va-care/article_6ff5d068-f432-11e3-ae63-0019bb2963f4.html> suggesting a high level of frustration within the Wasilla community, Murkowski decided to press the issue to get a swifter resolution for Alaska's veteran community.

The text of her letter reads:

Allegations of Dr. Jacqueline Brecht Regarding Waiting Lists at the Anchorage VA Outpatient Clinic – On Sunday June 15, 2014, the New York Times reported allegations by Dr. Jacqueline Brecht, a former urologist at the Anchorage outpatient clinic that she was retaliated against for questioning scheduling practices in the 2005-2008 timeframe. My office first became aware of Dr. Brecht's allegations on June 6, 2014 following a telephone call to my staff from Dr. Brecht. During that telephone call, Dr. Brecht indicated that she had already reported her concerns to the VA Office of Inspector General. However, this is not the first time that we received anecdotal evidence of scheduling issues at the Anchorage VA during that specific timeframe. On May 14, 2014, I wrote to former Secretary Shinseki asking that the VA investigate scheduling discrepancies at the Anchorage VA dating back to the inception of the Iraq conflict. In light of the national controversy surrounding VA scheduling and allegations of personal misconduct by individuals at the Anchorage VA I have arrived at the conclusion that it is more appropriate that these issues be investigated by OIG. Regardless of whether the scheduling discrepancies Dr. Brecht alleges are still occurring it is important that her allegations be thoroughly investigated and the outcome of that investigation be transparent to Alaska's veterans.

Quality of Care at the Wasilla (Mat-Su) Community Based Outpatient Clinic – The Wasilla Community Based Outpatient Clinic (CBOC) serves a rising veteran population residing in Alaska's fastest growing geographic region. Veterans have long complained about scheduling issues at the clinic which was assigned only one provider. That provider resigned this spring. There are currently no permanent providers assigned to the Wasilla CBOC. In response to veteran concerns I inserted language in the Senate Appropriations Committee report to accompany the Fiscal Year 2015 MILCON/VA appropriations bill requiring that the VA report to Congress on persistent problems at the Wasilla CBOC. The OIG last visited the Wasilla CBOC during the week of November 5, 2012 but conducted a limited review focused on women's health, vaccinations, provider credentialing, and environmental safety and emergency management. It appears that OIG completely missed longstanding concerns about provider workload and its relationship to veteran access and quality of care in that review. I respectfully request that OIG return to Wasilla at its earliest convenience to review recent operations at the Wasilla CBOC. The urgency of such a review is reflected in an editorial which appeared in The Frontiersman, the newspaper of the Matanuska-Susitna Valley, on Saturday June 14, 2014, which is attached. [Link is featured in second paragraph of release.]
Senator Murkowski has been focused on the ongoing issues at the Wasilla CBOC. Most recently, she successfully inserted a provision in the FY2015 VA/Military Construction funding bill calling for a review of the facility's staffing problems<http://www.murkowski.senate.gov/public/index.cfm/pressreleases?ID=20cf1496-b602-4518-8263-8c57ba313c2f>. Murkowski is concerned that a 2012 IG investigation of the Wasilla facility focused on the wrong issues. According to Murkowski's letter, the "OIG completely missed longstanding concerns about provider workload and its relationship to veteran access and quality of care in that review."

Mr. Richard J. Griffin
Acting Inspector General
Department of Veterans Affairs
Office of Inspector General (50)
810 Vermont Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20420

Dear Mr. Griffin:

I write to request that the Office of Inspector General expedite an inquiry into two matters related to the Alaska VA Healthcare System:

1. Dr. Jacqueline Brecht's Allegations Regarding Waiting Lists at the Anchorage VA Outpatient Clinic – On Sunday June 15, 2014, the New York Times reported allegations by Dr. Jacqueline Brecht, a former urologist at the Anchorage outpatient clinic, that she was retaliated against for questioning scheduling practices in the 2005-2008 timeframe. My office first became aware of Dr. Brecht's allegations on June 6, 2014, by way of a telephone call to my staff from Dr. Brecht. During that call, Dr. Brecht indicated she had already reported her concerns to the VA Office of Inspector General. However, this is not the first time we received anecdotal evidence of scheduling issues at the Anchorage VA during that specific timeframe. On May 14, 2014, I wrote to former Secretary Shinseki asking the VA to investigate scheduling discrepancies at the Anchorage VA dating back to the inception of the Iraq conflict. In light of the national controversy surrounding VA scheduling and allegations of personal misconduct by individuals at the Anchorage VA I have arrived at the conclusion that it is more appropriate for the OIG to investigate these issues. Regardless of whether the scheduling discrepancies Dr. Brecht alleges are still occurring, it is important that her allegations be thoroughly investigated and the outcome of that investigation be fully transparent to Alaska's veterans.

2. Quality of Care at the Wasilla (Mat-Su) Community Based Outpatient Clinic – The Wasilla Community Based Outpatient Clinic (CBOC) serves a rising veteran population residing in Alaska's fastest growing geographic region. Veterans have long complained about scheduling issues at the clinic which was assigned only one provider. That provider resigned this spring and there are currently no permanent providers assigned to the Wasilla CBOC. In response to veteran concerns I inserted language in the Senate Appropriations Committee report to accompany the Fiscal Year 2015 MILCON/VA appropriations bill requiring that the VA report to Congress on persistent problems at the Wasilla CBOC.[1] The OIG last visited the Wasilla CBOC during the week of November 5, 2012, but conducted a limited review focused on women's health, vaccinations, provider credentialing, environmental safety and emergency management.[2] It appears that OIG completely missed longstanding concerns about provider workload and its relationship to veteran access and quality of care in that review. I respectfully request that OIG return to Wasilla as soon as possible to review recent operations at the Wasilla CBOC. The urgency of such a review is reflected in an editorial which appeared in The Frontiersman, the newspaper of the Matanuska-Susitna Valley, on Saturday June 14, 2014, which is attached.

My staff point of contact for this inquiry is Nathan Bergerbest, Senior Counsel in my Washington office, who may be reached at (202) 224-2839.

Respectfully,

Lisa Murkowski
United States Senator

Alaska, serves a significant veteran population in the fastest growing region of Alaska. Since its opening, this clinic has been plagued by security issues and a series of stressful incidents including the suicide of a veteran in the clinic's parking lot. The Committee understands that these issues coupled with a lack of staffing at the clinic to support a large caseload have resulted in staff attrition, including the recent resignation of the clinic's only medical provider. While the Department of Veterans Affairs may be moving diligently to fill staff vacancies using all available incentives, the Committee directs the Department to provide to the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress a report no later than February 1, 2015, on the staffing challenges it has faced at Wasilla from the inception of the clinic, the appropriate level of staffing in relation to patient loads, and the actions being taken to achieve the appropriate level of staffing.

Valley Veterans Review VA Care

Posted: Saturday, June 14, 2014 6:12 pm

Sometimes the stories we publish hit a nerve with readers. And rarely, is it a story we expect that winds up generating such a wave of phone calls, emails and letters. Case in point:

We published a story on Tuesday, June 10 about the Wasilla Veterans Administration clinic and a mention it warranted in a Washington, D.C., report from the Senate Appropriations Committee. The clinic was included in the report after U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski specifically requested it be reviewed.

The results of that report called for an investigation into staffing shortages at the clinic that have caused long wait times and a stressful working environment amplified by a veteran shot himself to death in the VA parking lot.

Nationally we know this story is a hot-button issue. We're glad for the big spotlight on the shortcomings of the VA nationwide. We hope this examination will lead to the overhaul of this broken system and begin to craft a new process that will better fulfill the promises we made as a nation to our veterans.

But the story we wrote was relatively straightforward. It came together so late in the day we didn't even try to call D.C. offices (with their four hour time differences) for comment. It was written completely off of the record of those meetings and using quotes from press releases issued by our state's two senators.

Andrew Wellner wrote the story for us. He spent most of Tuesday afternoon answering calls from veterans with a lot to say about the services provided by the VA in Wasilla.

Veterans called to encourage further reporting on this issue, to share their stories of bureaucratic runaround and to call on our senators to hold public meetings to review the shortfalls and find solutions.

This community level review from veterans who rely on the VA for medical care was much more thorough and enlightening than the few sentences mentioned in the national report we wrote about Tuesday.

Valley veterans made it clear to us that this is an important local story for many people in the Mat-Su. Thank you, Readers, for your calls and emails.

We will continue to follow this story line and we will work to create a community dialog with our U.S. Senators so they have the can benefit from the same educational opportunities veterans shared with us this week.

We hope in doing so we can help improve the medical care our veterans receive.

Honoring the promises made to our members of the Armed Services is one important way as a community and a nation can honor their service.

had a chance to review.

In the spread sheet, all actions are in one document, sorted by brigade, wing, and headquarters unit.
Also attached are glossaries and additional information regarding regulations.

Take a look and see how we might improve. The information was fairly easy to gather and now that we have it all in one document, maintaining and regular reporting should not be a problem.

AR 15-6, Procedures for Investigating Officers and Boards of Officers, dated 2 October 2006

Functions of investigations and boards: The primary function of any investigation or board of officers is to ascertain facts and to report them to the appointing authority. It is the duty of the investigating officer or board to ascertain and consider the evidence on all sides of each issue, thoroughly and impartially, and to make findings and recommendations that are warranted by the facts and that comply with the instructions of the appointing authority.

Action of the appointing authority

a. Basis of decision. Unless otherwise provided by another directive, the appointing authority is neither bound nor limited by the findings or recommendations of an investigation or board. Therefore, the appointing authority may take action less favorable than that recommended with regard to a respondent or other individual, unless the specific directive under which the investigation or board is appointed provides otherwise. The appointing authority may consider any relevant information in making a decision to take adverse action against an individual, even information that was not considered at the investigation or board (see para 1–9*c* and d).

1–9. Use of results of investigations in adverse administrative actions

c. Except as provided in d below, when adverse administrative action is contemplated against an individual (other than a civilian employee, see b above), including an individual designated as a respondent, based upon information obtained as a result of an investigation or board conducted pursuant to this regulation, the appropriate military authority must observe the following minimum safeguards before taking final action against the individual:

(1) Notify the person in writing of the proposed adverse action and provide a copy, if not previously provided, of that part of the findings and recommendations of the investigation or board and the supporting evidence on which the proposed adverse action is based.

(2) Give the person a reasonable opportunity to reply in writing and to submit relevant rebuttal material.

(3) Review and evaluate the person's response.

d. There is no requirement to refer the investigation to the individual if the adverse action contemplated is prescribed in regulations or other directives that provide procedural safeguards, such as notice to the individual and opportunity to respond. For example, there is no requirement to refer an investigation conducted under this regulation to a soldier prior to giving the soldier an adverse evaluation report based upon the investigation because the regulations governing evaluation reports provide the necessary procedural safeguards.

Findings and Recommendations

Findings

a. General. A finding is a clear and concise statement of a fact that can be readily deduced from evidence in the record. It is directly established by evidence in the record or is a conclusion of fact by the investigating officer or board. Negative findings (for example, that the evidence does not establish a fact) are often appropriate. The number and nature of the findings required depend on the purpose of the investigation or board and on the instructions of the appointing authority. The investigating officer or board will normally not exceed the scope of findings indicated by the appointing authority. (See para 3–9.) The findings will be necessary and sufficient to support each recommendation.

3–9. Communications with the appointing authority
If in the course of the investigation or board something happens that could cause the appointing authority to consider enlarging, restricting, or terminating the proceedings, altering the composition of the fact–finding body or otherwise modifying any instruction in the original appointment, the investigating officer or president of the board will report this situation to the appointing authority with recommendations.

b. Standard of proof. Unless another directive or an instruction of the appointing authority establishes a different standard, the findings of investigations and boards governed by this regulation must be supported by a greater weight of evidence than supports a contrary conclusion, that is, evidence which, after considering all evidence presented, points to a particular conclusion as being more credible and probable than any other conclusion. The weight of the evidence is not determined by the number of witnesses or volume of exhibits, but by considering all the evidence and evaluating such factors as the witness's demeanor, opportunity for knowledge, information possessed, ability to recall and relate events, and other indications of veracity.
c. Form. Findings will be stated to reflect clearly the relevant facts established by the evidence and the conclusions thereon of the investigating officer or board. If findings are required on only one subject, normally they will be stated in chronological order. If findings are required on several distinct subjects, they normally will be stated separately for each subject and chronologically within each one. If the investigation or board is authorized by a directive that establishes specific requirements for findings, those requirements must be satisfied.

Recommendations

The nature and extent of recommendations required also depend on the purpose of the investigation or board and on the instructions of the appointing authority. Each recommendation, even a negative one (for example that no further action be taken) must be consistent with the findings. Investigating officers and boards will make their recommendations according to their understanding of the rules, regulations, policies, and customs of the service, guided by their concept of fairness both to the Government and to individuals.

MG Tom Katkus,

For your situational awareness, as the start of the investigation(s) into misconduct by senior Alaska National Guard leaders has only begun (I suspect this will turn into "Rapegate" - a scandal that will capture Alaska and possibly “lower 48” media attention after Labor Day as we roll into the Governor's election cycle about how “weekend warriors"' can pull the most private/secretive information about any civilian without any Court order - a scandal that will be more personal and factual than anything the people in Alaska have to worry about with the NSA), I wanted to ensure you know that the BOI/PR family insists that I turn over every rock, hold no prisoners, and do whatever is necessary to defend their honor but that I do not call for your resignation or otherwise directly ridicule you. Your relationship with both the boy (BOI/PR) and his father is a personal and lengthy one that I don't understand nor appreciate.

They only called in the “big guns” (my law firm), bet their homes (i.e. payment for my legal fees), and took the “take no prisoners” approach after BOI/PR Those actions were the proverbial nuclear bomb dropped on the BOI/PR family that brought with it shame and dishonor that could not be allowed to go without being countered. My scorched earth operations will not end as long as the nuclear option is being used against the BOI/PR family.

Based on that information, the hypocrisy of me then going after you (the ultimate "Judge" in this situation) to tarnish your name and impact your full time employment is not lost on them. However, don't confuse the loyalty the BOI/PR family has for you personally as my being muzzled from very publicly demanding that BOI/PR be "relieved for cause". In my opinion, BOI/PR's lack of judgment in how he handled this matter is unfitting of Command - whether you and the Governor continue to support him after you are made aware of these facts is a valid public discussion for September/October/November.

As I will "officially" notify the State Attorney General shortly, it is not too late for us to walk away, my client will sign a confidentiality agreement and forget this whole situation ever happened (i.e. not seek attorney fees/damages, etc.). All that he asks for in return is that he be left alone and be allowed to progress in the AGR program until he can retire. Applying risks vs rewards to this situation, that offer should be a "no brainer".

This communication isn't meant as any type of formal or official notice, just a short and informal missive to a friend of the BOI/PR family to explain that despite the wording of letters/emails from a DC military justice powerhouse lawyer, cooler heads can/will prevail - however… the time is limited to reaching a settlement. Once the "cat is out of the bag" this will be all or nothing for everybody involved. This problem is still being 'kept within the family' so to speak, no lawsuits have been filed, no public records exist that prevent this entire situation from disappearing. My client is eager to make this all disappear if you wish…

Regards,
Mat

Hello, Cindy.

To answer one of your questions from our discussion yesterday, the document that mandates use of Military Criminal Investigative Organizations (MCIOs) is Department of Defense Instruction (DoDI) 6495.02. See Enclosure 5, paragraph 3h(1).

For the National Guard, this is implemented in CNGBI 0400.01 and CNGBN 0400.

I will get back to you on the other issue we discussed.

Have a great weekend.

BOI/PR:

Please consider this email a formal report of unlawful conduct by members of the Alaska National Guard pursuant to 10 USC 1034 on behalf of BOI/PR/FPA.

I am alleging that the Alaska National Guard unlawfully obtained confidential police reports from the Anchorage Police Department (hereinafter "APD") in violation of Alaska Statute 12.62.160 (amongst other laws). With specificity, on BOI/PR/FPA you appointed BOI/PR/FPA as an AR 15-6 investigative officer. The appointment orders clearly limited the scope of the investigation to "BOI/PR/FPA abusing…authority and engaging in inappropriate relationships with junior Soldiers" (quoting in relevant part the appointment memo). Notwithstanding this very narrow scope of investigative authority, it appears to us that BOI/PR/FPA called the Anchorage Police Department Record Section and obtained a confidential police rape investigation report involving a civilian with no affiliation with the military (see "Chronology" of the AR 15-6 Investigation Findings and Recommendations as well as Annex Index "Anchorage Police Department Report # BOI/PR/FPA") such actions are clearly outside the scope of his appointment orders. I am not licensed to practice law in Alaska however it appears to me that BOI/PR/FPA's acquisition, possession, and disclosure of this police report appears not to be in compliance with Alaska Statute (see AS 12.62.160 and 12.62.180)

You are hereby advised that should the Alaska National Guard continue to knowingly use the aforementioned confidential criminal justice information, you may be* subject to civil liability damages as allowed by Alaska Statute 12.62.200(a) which reads in relevant part "a person whose criminal justice information has been…used in knowing violation of this chapter or a regulation adopted under this chapter may bring an action for damages in the superior court" (emphasis added).

Continued unlawful disclosure of such documents with regard to BOI/PR/FPA's AR 15-6 report OR the alleged civilian rape victim (who has been clearly identified by name in additional to other confidential/personal information) shall likely be interpreted as knowing and unlawful violation of the law and cause for adverse legal action*.

*As my law licenses do not extend to the state of Alaska, my interpretation of Alaska state law is not as a matter of legal fact, but rather educated legal knowledge.

Consider yourself duly advised of such facts and proceed accordingly with such knowledge.

I, on behalf of BOI/PR/FPA, hereby demand of you and your Command the following:

· A full audit of personnel who did or could have seen this unlawfully obtained report;

· The removal of the personnel who have seen this unlawfully obtained report from rendering any decision on or being involved in the proposed penalties for the alleged violations contained in the full AR 15-6 investigative findings;

· That the unlawfully obtained report and all copies (physical and digital) shall be immediately returned to the control of a law enforcement officer (due to our intention to initiate litigation with you named as the defendant, I certainly encourage you to consult an attorney prior to destroying any records or deleting any digital copies to prevent the spoliation of evidence); and · Upon completion of the above, that I receive confirmation that no other unlawfully obtained records exist in the hands of non-Alaska State certified law enforcement personnel.

Furthermore, I am demanding under separate cover that MG Katkus conduct an AR 15-6 investigation into your conduct, PR/BOI 's conduct/performance, and determine how confidential law enforcement information about an alleged civilian rape victim was obtained by a 'weekend warrior' outside the scope of his employment/investigative authority. Given the serious nature of these allegations, the need for a complex investigation and the impact it could have on civilian rape victim's trust in local law enforcement reporting (ie any weekend warrior can walk in and learn the most intimidate details of their sex lifes with nothing more than an 'appointment order' that doesn't even allow access to civilian police files or pertain to misconduct involving civilians and have those details freely and widely distributed in National Guard circles), I am under separate cover filing a report of misconduct/unlawful activities with the Inspector General.

The fact that our office (one which is accustomed to reviewing both matters of military law and matters of sexual assault on a daily basis) was so extraordinarily mortified by the content of BOI/... 's AR-16 report, yet nobody in the Alaska National Guard who reviewed that report was shocked (or apparently even thought twice about the graphic content) is telling to me of the toxic culture that exists within your Command. As I see it, either you are indifferent to the rights/feelings of alleged civilian sexual assault victims or you are so filled with bloodlust to get another trophy head (in this case BOI/PR/FPA) on the wall (figuratively speaking) that you didn't realize the basic and not just legal, but moral, things that are right to do. Disclosing the type of undergarment and other intimate facts of a civilian who alleged rape in an administrative National Guard report is grossly disturbing and is guaranteed to bring shame and discredit upon your Command and the Alaska National Guard if exposed to public scrutiny. We at Tully Rinckey PLLC are deeply sickened by this and will ensure that it is properly reported to the appropriate officials as a measure to protect future potential civilian victims and further, that those who deserve punishment are punished to the fullest extent of the law.

I hereby call on your immediate resignation as PR/BOI. If you do not resign your Command, I will exercise my rights under the 1st Amendment to publicly call upon the Commander in Chief of the Alaska National Guard to relieve you for cause. By separate communication to the Alaska Attorney General, I am placing them on notice of our intent to commence a 42 USC 1983 action against you in your personal capacity as well as every other individual who knew or should have known that obtaining, possessing, and distributing of confidential civilian sexual assault victim information in this case was not in accordance with the rights afforded under the United States Constitution and applicable law, rules, and regulations or even covered by your appointment orders/competent lawful authority.

In all my years in the military and as a civilian military criminal defense attorney, I have never been so disturbed by the deliberate indifference and lack of common sense by so many in one command.

I will also inform you that this is only the first in a series of allegations of misconduct that we will disclose in due course. As the saying goes this isn't the strongest, best, or most powerful arrow in our quiver just merely the first one in which we will use but be assured that this is the 'tip of the iceberg' of 10 USC 1034 reporting. It is merely being disclosed first/quickly to mitigate damages and place you and others on 'notice' per AS 12.62.200(a).

Sincerely,

Mathew B. Tully, Esq.

Subject: BOI 's unprofessionalism

Good Morning General Katkus,

I hope you had a relaxing and enjoyable weekend.

As you know from my original letter of introduction, I am one of the attorneys for BOI/PR with regard to his issues with the Alaska National Guard. I write to you this morning seeking to redress the grievances that my client and I have. Below is the email that was sent to the Alaska Attorney General about the unprofessional incident by your attorney that occurred last week. If you condone and allow the conduct of your attorney to go unpunished than you are going to tarnish your good name. You also may be in violation of Department of Defense Directives and Federal laws/regulations. As you can see from my email to the Attorney General, I am alleging violations of 5 USC 552a, consider this email a reporting of such misconduct per 10 USC 1034 on behalf of BOI/PR.

It appears to me that your attorney is misstating the applicable attorney ethical rules to you (which makes me wonder what else he is misstating to your personal detriment). As I have repeatedly said, we are only at the beginning of a long legal struggle (if you don't wish to settle - of course you can settle this today by using your authority as TAG to take BOI/PR off the table and I go away and my client gives you a non-disclosure agreement). However, I will not tolerate your attorney making false allegations against me or dishonoring my name and neither should you. I am demanding you as the Commander of the Alaska National Guard apologize for the unprofessionalism of your attorney in his interactions with me last week.

As you are well aware as an experienced government official, General Officer, and Military Commander, the bad legal opinions of your lawyer isn't a defense to most legal actions as you are personally responsible for everything you do or fail to do as well as what your Command does or fails to do. Shortly, my client will be unable to "unring" the bell - the window for settlement can be measured in days (if not hours) now and the ball is solely in your Court to decide if this will settle or be litigated as I believe my client's settlement demand is more than fair.

Feel free to give me a call anytime you want to talk settlement or to apologize for the actions of your attorney.

Mat

Subject: Unprofessionalism of Assistant Attorney General BOI

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

Please consider this a formal notice that I consider the actions today of your Assistant Attorney General BOI to be improper. With specificity, during discussions pertaining to the settlement of actions involving the Alaska DMVA and MG Katkus he threatened me by saying he was going to file an ethical complaint against me because I communicated with a military official about federal administrative military proceedings. I believe using allegations of professional misconduct during settlement discussions to be improper and unprofessional.

Further showing unprofessionalism, he hung up the phone on me without notice during our discussions. When I called back to figure out if in fact he hung up the phone, he stated "You are pissing me off" before hanging up the phone a second time. Such conduct should not be acceptable to you and not condoned. Such conduct is not only unbecoming an attorney but of a public servant.

As a point of clarification, he previously made it crystal clear that he did NOT represent DMVA and MG Katkus in any military or federal administrative matter; a position that I believe is supported by law and federal rules.

Next, he sent the email below which appears to be in direct violation of federal laws that allow the reporting of misconduct or mismanagement to appropriate federal officials. The hindrance, intimidation, or threatening of persons making reports of misconduct to federal officials about federal matters should not be tolerated or condoned by your office. The email below is being forwarded to appropriate federal officials to determine if any violation of federal law has occurred as in all my years of doing military law no state official has ever attempted to block communications to a federal official about federal matters.

Next, preventing my communication with federal officials about federal administrative matters may be a violation of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act and other relevant Defense Department Laws, Rules, and Regulations. Such denial of due process rights has made it impossible for my client to properly defend himself and will be the basis for appeals before the Army Board for Correction of Military Records (ABCMR) due to the injustice this has caused my client. It is also evidence in my opinion of not only 'unlawful command influence' but now the political inference of your office and by virtue of that fact the Governor - state politics and politicians should NOT play a role in federal administrative actions - the email below clearly shows that is exactly what has happened.

It appears that the Alaska National Guard has violated 5 USC 552a(g)(1)(D) making them liable for damages under 5 USC 552a(g)(4). I have also requested the DOD IG open an investigation to determine if any "federal personnel" as defined by 5 USC 552a(a)(13) to include personnel employed by the Alaska National Guard violated 5 USC 552a(i)(1) in their communications with your office and Mr. BOI specifically. I request you conduct an immediate investigation to determine if my client's federal personnel or other records have been improperly disclosed to your office in violation of 5 USC 552a. If they have, I request you tell me what actions you plan to take to remedy this situation (at the least I believe recusal of your office in all further matters involving my client and DMVA - namely the 42 USC 1983 lawsuit that will be served in the near future which may now include BOI personally and you if I can establish any of the federal law violations mentioned above did in fact happen and you failed to take proper remedial actions against Mr. BOI - is mandated by the improper access to these records by your office).

I am requesting you immediately conduct an investigation as well into the information/allegations provided above. I am also requesting you confirm in writing to me that your office is the lawful representative in all military and federal administrative matters involving my client BOI not withstanding my protest that such a position is unsupported by federal law so I may seek a federal injunction to prevent your offices further interference in these matter.

Good Morning General Katkus,

I hope you had a relaxing and enjoyable weekend.

As you know from my original letter of introduction, I am one of the attorneys for BOI/PR with regard to his issues with the Alaska National Guard. I write to you this morning seeking to redress the grievances that my client and I have. Below is the email that was sent to the Alaska Attorney General about the unprofessional incident by your attorney that occurred last week. If you condone and allow the conduct of your attorney to go unpunished than you are going to tarnish your good name. You also may be in violation of Department of Defense Directives and Federal laws/regulations. As you can see from my email to the Attorney General, I am alleging violations of 5 USC 552a, consider this email a reporting of such misconduct per 10 USC 1034 on behalf of BOI/PR.

It appears to me that your attorney is misstating the applicable attorney ethical rules to you (which makes me wonder what else he is misstating to your personal detriment). As I have repeatedly said, we are only at the beginning of a long legal struggle (if you don't wish to settle - of course you can settle this today by using your authority as TAG to take BOI/PR off the table and I go away and my client gives you a non-disclosure agreement). However, I will not tolerate your attorney making false allegations against me or dishonoring my name and neither should you. I am demanding you as the Commander of the Alaska National Guard apologize for the unprofessionalism of your attorney in his interactions with me last week.

As you are well aware as an experienced government official, General Officer, and Military Commander, the bad legal opinions of your lawyer isn't a defense to most legal actions as you are personally responsible for everything you do or fail to do as well as what your Command does or fails to do. Shortly, my client will be unable to "unring" the bell - the window for settlement can be measured in days (if not hours) now and the ball is solely in your Court to decide if this will settle or be litigated as I believe my client's settlement demand is more than fair.

Feel free to give me a call anytime you want to talk settlement or to apologize for the actions of your attorney.

Mat

Subject: Unprofessionalism of Assistant Attorney General BOI

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

Please consider this a formal notice that I consider the actions today of your Assistant Attorney General BOI to be improper. With specificity, during discussions pertaining to the settlement of actions involving the Alaska DMVA and MG Katkus he threatened me by saying he was going to file an ethical complaint against me because I communicated with a military official about federal administrative military proceedings. I believe using allegations of professional misconduct during settlement discussions to be improper and unprofessional.

Further showing unprofessionalism, he hung up the phone on me without notice during our discussions. When I called back to figure out if in fact he hung up the phone, he stated "You are pissing me off" before hanging up the phone a second time. Such conduct should not be acceptable to you and not condoned. Such conduct is not only unbecoming an attorney but of a public servant.

As a point of clarification, he previously made it crystal clear that he did NOT represent DMVA and MG Katkus in any military or federal administrative matter; a position that I believe is supported by law and federal rules.

Next, he sent the email below which appears to be in direct violation of federal laws that allow the reporting of misconduct or mismanagement to appropriate federal officials. The hindrance, intimidation, or threatening of persons making reports of misconduct to federal officials about federal matters should not be tolerated or condoned by your office. The email below is being forwarded to appropriate federal officials to determine if any violation of federal law has occurred as in all my years of doing military law no state official has ever attempted to block communications to a federal official about federal matters.

Next, preventing my communication with federal officials about federal administrative matters may be a violation of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act and other relevant Defense Department Laws, Rules, and Regulations. Such denial of due process rights has made it impossible for my client to properly defend himself and will be the basis for appeals before the Army Board for Correction of Military Records (ABCMR) due to the injustice this has caused my client. It is also evidence in my opinion of not only 'unlawful command influence' but now the political inference of your office and by virtue of that fact the Governor - state politics and politicians should NOT play a role in federal administrative actions - the email below clearly shows that is exactly what has happened.

It appears that the Alaska National Guard has violated 5 USC 552a(g)(1)(D) making them liable for damages under 5 USC 552a(g)(4). I have also requested the DOD IG open an investigation to determine if any "federal personnel" as defined by 5 USC 552a(a)(13) to include personnel employed by the Alaska National Guard violated 5 USC 552a(i)(1) in their communications with your office and Mr. BOI specifically. I request you conduct an immediate investigation to determine if my client's federal personnel or other records have been improperly disclosed to your office in violation of 5 USC 552a. If they have, I request you tell me what actions you plan to take to remedy this situation (at the least I believe recusal of your office in all further matters involving my client and DMVA - namely the 42 USC 1983 lawsuit that will be served in the near future which may now include BOI personally and you if I can establish any of the federal law violations mentioned above did in fact happen and you failed to take proper remedial actions against Mr. BOI - is mandated by the improper access to these records by your office).

I am requesting you immediately conduct an investigation as well into the information/allegations provided above. I am also requesting you confirm in writing to me that your office is the lawful representative in all military and federal administrative matters involving my client BOI/PR not withstanding my protest that such a position is unsupported by federal law so I may seek a federal injunction to prevent your offices further interference in these matter.

MG Tom Katkus,

For your situational awareness, as the start of the investigation(s) into misconduct by senior Alaska National Guard leaders has only begun (I suspect this will turn into "Rapegate" - a scandal that will capture Alaska and possibly "lower 48" media attention after Labor Day as we roll into the Governor's election cycle about how "weekend warriors"' can pull the most private/secretive information about any civilian without any Court order - a scandal that will be more personal and factual than anything the people in Alaska have to worry about with the NSA), I wanted to ensure you know that the [BOI/PR] family insists that I turn over every rock, hold no prisoners, and do whatever is necessary to defend their honor but that I do not call for your resignation or otherwise directly ridicule you. Your relationship with both the boy ([BOI/PR]) and his father is a personal and lengthy one that I don't understand nor appreciate.

They only called in the "big guns" (my law firm), bet their homes (i.e. payment for my legal fees), and took the "take no prisoners" approach after [BOI/PR] Those actions were the proverbial nuclear bomb dropped on the [BOI/PR] family that brought with it shame and dishonor that could not be allowed to go without being countered. My scorched earth operations will not end as long as the nuclear option is being used against the BOI/PR family.

Based on that information, the hypocrisy of me then going after you (the ultimate "Judge" in this situation) to tarnish your name and impact your full time employment is not lost on them. However, don't confuse the loyalty the BOI/PR family has for you personally as my being muzzled from very publicly demanding that BOI/PR be "relieved for cause". In my opinion, BOI/PR's lack of judgment in how he handled this matter is unfitting of Command - whether you and the Governor continue to support him after you are made aware of these facts is a valid public discussion for September/October/November.

As I will "officially" notify the State Attorney General shortly, it is not too late for us to walk away, my client will sign a confidentiality agreement and forget this whole situation ever happened (i.e. not seek attorney fees/damages, etc.). All that he asks for in return is that he be left alone and be allowed to progress in the AGR program until he can retire. Applying risks vs rewards to this situation, that offer should be a "no brainer".

This communication isn't meant as any type of formal or official notice, just a short and informal missive to a friend of the BOI/PR family to explain that despite the wording of letters/emails from a DC military justice powerhouse lawyer, cooler heads can/will prevail - however… the time is limited to reaching a settlement. Once the "cat is out of the bag" this will be all or nothing for everybody involved. This problem is still being 'kept within the family' so to speak, no lawsuits have been filed, no public records exist that prevent this entire situation from disappearing. My client is eager to make this all disappear if you wish…

Importance: High

Executive Summary: This email puts the Governor's office on notice of allegations of unlawful access by the Alaska National Guard to confidential police rape reports that contain intimate details about civilians with no military affiliation. This secret National Guard program used federal funds to help state official's access confidential police files that they normally would have been unable to access without a Court order or statutory authority. It has been in place for years and apparently to me with the consent and/or knowledge of Major General Katkus and other senior leaders. This program likely violates the constitutional rights of civilian sex crime victims and other civilians who gave statements in criminal matters who had no clue their confidential police reports/statements were being widely distributed within the National Guard.

Your and the Governor's immediate attention to this matter is requested.

Mike,

I am an Attorney in Washington DC who has been retained by a member of the Alaska National Guard who wishes to disclose gross misconduct to the Governor (via you) and likely commence a lawsuit against numerous officials who have engaged in constitutional rights violations. MG Katkus is fully aware of this situation and has been for some time but apparently has failed to take action so that is why I am escalating this to you (and the Governor). This email will likely be introduced as evidence of notification of the Governor of these serious allegations as such I am requesting a return email confirming receipt of this email.

My client loves the National Guard and doesn't want to bring it shame but feels he is being victimized in retaliation for his prior unwillingness to perjure himself during the National Guard Sex Scandal witch-hunts (those allegations will be saved for another day). My client is eager to quickly settle his dispute with the National Guard for a mutual confidentiality agreement & no money just assurances he will be left alone till he can retire; a settlement that should be a no brainer for the State given the breadth and depth of corruption we are aware of.

Please consider this email a formal report of misconduct by members of the Alaska National Guard to the Governor/Commander in Chief.

On or about 10 June 2014, I received from an Alaska National Guard Official a confidential police report that as I understand Alaska Law (I am not an Alaskan attorney) should not have been in the hands of anybody who was not a sworn law enforcement officer or otherwise entitled by State Statute to possess it (See AS 12.62.160 and Alaska Code 13 AAC 68.320). This report was contained in a federal administrative file of all places, available for thousands of federal employees to access and read without restrictions. The Anchorage Police Department report # [redacted] shocked the conscience of my law firm employees who read it. It named the alleged rape victim ([redacted]), provided her age ([redacted] when the report was written), address and employer ([redacted]), amongst a plethora of other personal/confidential information. In sickening and shocking detail it talked about [redacted] and contained such graphic quotes as "[redacted]

[redacted PR] Even more shocking is this report was widely distributed amongst the highest levels of the Alaska National Guard in addition to countless others at low and mid-levels within the Alaska National Guard who saw nothing wrong with it being attached to federal administrative records without [redacted PR] consent or knowledge. This report should have been safeguarded from public records and Alaska National Guard possession because #1 it contained the most confidential/private of details about an alleged civilian rape victim, #2 it contained information on police policy and procedures for investigating sex assault crimes and #3 the allegations were later deemed by the police department to be "unprovable" after an extensive criminal investigation involving numerous civilian police officials; thus the alleged suspect should not be subject to vigilantism by others (in this case vigilantism by the Alaska National Guard), the very reasons for the laws that keep these records secret (See Alaska Statute 12.62.005 which states the intent of the law to limit access to police records that did not result in an arrest is to "protects victims of crime, allows the proper administration of justice, and avoids vigilantism")

As you can see from the attached documents, the National Guard has secretly been able to access confidential police files on civilians with no military affiliation without being a "criminal justice agency" as defined by AS 12.62.900 or engaging in "criminal justice activities" as defined by AS 12.62.900. Nor does any law specifically allow the two named Alaska National Guard officials to have access to civilian rape reports that did not result in an arrest (interestingly to me these people claim a right to police files because they are "responsible for coordinating with and providing advice to Commanders regarding disciplinary actions" – guess what? How many other government entities have people who provide "advice" to decision makers about administrative disciplinary actions? This is a slippery slope - why aren't the people who work in the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities who advise low level managers on administrative disciplinary actions given access to these confidential police reports? (probably because such conduct is illegal? But again what do I know? I am not an Alaska Attorney). The attached documents are shocking in their sheer boldness, while the National Guard concedes they can have access to public records (i.e. Court documents etc); they want exactly what the law doesn't allow them, "police reports provide us with essential elements of offenses to determine the severity of those offenses, as well as witness statements" (quoting from the attached).

The attached documents show that the Anchorage Police in apparent contradiction of early statements from your administration about the original Alaska National Guard sex scandal and how hard it was to obtain evidence has given the National Guard unrestricted access to its records and has been far from uncooperative – if anything they are complicit in the Constitutional rights deprivations of civilians. Furthermore, the attached documents show that the Alaska National Guard did not hide the reason for wanting to obtain these confidential records – they wanted them to engage in vigilantism (i.e. administrative disciplinary action even when the Police didn't make an arrest)!!

Based on these allegations, I would like to know when the Governor first got briefed on the secret National Guard program to access confidential police rape reports on civilians without the victim's consent? Why didn't he object to this outrageous invasion of privacy for the civilian victim and other civilians who provided "witness statements" thinking these records would be confidential?

Why wasn't the Governor not shocked that hundreds of National Guard folks were able to read obscene/graphic confidential police civilian rape reports without MG Katkus and other key leaders putting any type of internal controls on their distribution?

Why has the Governor not demanded the resignation of MG Katkus, [redacted BOI/PR], and the State Judge Advocate (amongst many other senior National Guard officials) who knew or should have known about this program for months if not years but did nothing to stop/end it? Is it because the Governor ultimately approved of this secret plan? Does the Governor, given these allegations, still have trust and confidence in the judgment, integrity, and wisdom of MG Katkus and [redacted BOI/PR]?

Does the Governor believe that the Alaska National Guard Staff Judge Advocate's Office (i.e. Alaska lawyers who work for your National Guard) acted appropriately in requesting, possessing, and then unrestricted distributing confidential police reports that it apparently had no lawful authority to obtain, possess, or distribute? Has the Governor referred any allegations to the Alaska Bar Association or other Attorney Licensing Agency for investigation?

How many police reports did the National Guard obtain under this secret program? Will the Governor order new investigations into every case that obtained evidence from the "fruits of the poisonous tree" (i.e. from this secret program)? Will the Governor punish those within the Alaska National Guard who improperly used these confidential police reports?

I am totally stunned by the conduct of your senior National Guard leaders, their lack of respect to civilian rape victims, to allow confidential police reports about civilian rape victims to be so freely distributed is sickening to every female who I tell this fact pattern too…when this matter hits the media, it will undermine the trust that sex crime victims and civilian witnesses to crime have with civilian law enforcement as these victims/witnesses will worry if their most intimate secrets will be laughed at in the local National Guard Armory. It will also bring great discredit upon the National Guard and its Commander in Chief for either allowing it to happen or being asleep at the wheel when it was happening. Right now all fingers appear to point to the Governor and his lack of leadership for keeping Katkus (a former APD official – was Katkus personally involved in setting up this program using his relationship with his former subordinates to do an end run around the law?) and his team in place for years while this secret obtaining of confidential police reports on rape victims occurred. Why? What changes do you plan to make to fix this problem? Are you going to immediately end this program? If not, you are approving of this program – in either case it is a political issue for September/October/November to be sure!

I eagerly await your responses.

Dear Ms. Cain:

Per our conversation this morning, I am requesting authorization to receive police reports from the Anchorage Police Department, as our office is responsible for coordinating with and providing advice to Commanders regarding disciplinary actions against soldiers and airmen who become involved with civilian criminal issues. Though we are able to obtain court documents including complaints and judgments; police reports provide us with essential elements of offenses to determine the severity of those offenses, as well as witness statements.

RE: Request Authorization to Receive Police Reports

Dear Ms. Cain:

I am requesting that another paralegal within the Alaska National Guard receive authorization to receive police reports from the Anchorage Police Department. Her information is as follows:

SSG Lina M. Wood
lina.m.wood3.mil@mail.mil
SSN: PR / BOI
DOB: PR / BOI

SSG Wood's office is correlated with a command section which directly oversees disciplinary actions against soldiers within their unit who become involved with civilian criminal matters, and it would be more efficient for her to be able to obtain police reports directly. And again, though we are able to obtain court documents including complaints and judgments, police reports provide us with essential elements of offenses to determine the severity of those offenses, as well as witness statements. If you approve of SSG Wood's access, I can pass on the email address to her for submission of requests.

If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me at this email, alan.s.hutchison.mil@mail.mil, or call me at 428-6021. Thank you for your assistance.

I received this report late Thursday. With most of the leadership know back from Mongolia, we will start in ernest to capture the data in the working spreadsheet into some type of summary report with no acronyms and create a means to provide a roll up of all units and both services.

Disciplinary report current as of 7.3.2014 Very few changes. Nothing significant to report...minor updates reflect the following:

BOI/PR/FPA/LE

Next Army Adverse Action meeting is 9 July. No drill in July which will impact movement on packets but on the upside, it allows the Adverse Action Group the time to identify the next step required at August drill and ensure the Commander's Administrative Assistants (CAA's) are tracking disciplinary action to completion.

Mike

I know you are very busy but in any spare moment you might catch, attached is a much less redacted version of the IG report in response to Senator Murkowski's 2013 inquiry. The first 18 pages are the investigatory report by the IG and a second report of inquiry by CID on fraud allegations. The rest of the document is a copy of the heavily redacted report that The IG released to Channel 11.

If you get a chance to review this, I will discuss with you as time permits at the up coming picnics.

Records Release Office

MG Thomas H. Katkus

Dear General Katkus:

This responds to your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request dated May 27, 2014, for copy of IG case DIG 13-00087. Additionally, we're providing you with a copy of IG case DIG 12-60032, as these two reports will be released to the Channel 11 News Anchorage, Alaska, and to the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence & Sexual Assault (ANDVSA) in a few days in response to their FOIA requests. Accordingly, we're enclosing two releasable versions of DIG 13-00087 and DIG 12-60032. One version is what is releasable to you and the other is the version we intend to release to Channel 11 News and to the ANDVSA.

Enclosed are the IG reports that are responsive to your request. Please note that the redacted version we're releasing to you is more expansive than what we intend to release to Channel 11 News and to ANDVSA, in recognition of your privacy interests. Where boxed-in and noted within the reports, information has been withheld that is exempt from the mandatory disclosure provisions of the FOIA under exemptions (b)(6) and (b)(7)(C).

a. Exemption (b)(6) applies to information about individuals in "personnel, medical files and similar files," when the disclosure of such information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

b. Exemption (b)(7)(C) applies to information contained in records compiled for law enforcement purposes, any release of which could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of the privacy of any individuals who were mentioned therein, or who conducted and/or supervised the conduct of an inquiry and investigation. We withheld substantial amount of information from these reports because release of information pertaining to allegations against senior officials where the investigating agency found insufficient evidence to substantiate is a clearly unwarranted invasion of even a senior official's privacy interests.

This action constitutes a partial denial of your request. As the Initial Denial Authority (IDA), I partially denied your request. You may appeal this partial denial decision in writing within 60 days from the date of this letter. If you decide to appeal, please address your appeal through this office (ATTN: SAIG-ZXR), The Inspector General, 1700 Army Pentagon, RM 1E132, Washington, DC 20310-1700, to the Office of the General Counsel, Department of the Army. That office has the appellate authority for Army Inspector General initial FOIA determinations. In any such appeal, you should also provide a copy of this letter, along with sufficient justification upon which the Office of the General Counsel may base a decision.

There are no fees assessable for processing this request. If you have any questions concerning this response, please call Mr. De Ocampo or me at (703) 545-4591. Should you call, please refer to Case Number 14-676.

Sincerely,

REPORT OF INVESTIGATIVE INQUIRY

APR - 8 2014

NAME / POSITION: Mejor General (MG) Thomas H. Katkus, Tha Adjutant General (TAG), Alaska National Guard (AKNG)

ALLEGATION / FINDING: The allegation that MG Katkus failed to fostar a healthy command climate was not substentiated.

BACKGROUND:

1. On 19 June 2013, Alaska (AK) Senator (SEN) Lisa Murkowski referred a complaint regarding the command climate of the AKNG to the Departmant of Defense Inspector General (DODIG). (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, alleged the command climate was not conducive to encouraging Soldiers to report allegations (specifically of sexual assault / sexual harassment) due to fear of reprisal or no action by the chain of command (CoC).

2. On 26 June 2013, DODIG forwarded the complaint to the Department of the Army Inspector Genaral Agency (DAIG).

3. On 15 July 2013, The Inspector Genaral directed an investigation by DAIG.

STANDARD: Army Regulation (AR) 600-20 (Army Command Policy), 18 March 2008, Rapid Action Review 27 April 2010, states in paragraph 2-1(l) that every leadar will foster a healthy command climate.

DOCUMENTS / TESTIMONY:

1. A Joint Forces Headquartars – Alaska (JFHQ-AK) Memorandum, 4 Fabruary 2013, subject: AKNG Sensing Sessions, outlined MG Katkus' plan to reinforce command priorities, encouraga discussion and genarate ideas to promote success within the AKNG. Additionally, Soldiers were allowed to raise any othar concerns they had privately with the command inspector genaral.

2. A JFHQ-AK Memorandum, 24 June 2013, subject: Sensing Session Results from the 176th Air Wing (AW), summarized the results of a sensing session conducted on 28-29 May 2013 that included officers and enlisted members of the 176th AW. MG Katkus was one of four members of the command group that facilitated these sessions which identified forty-five (45) issue areas requiring command emphasis. MG Katkus's personal involvement demonstrated that HQ, AKNG, leadership took proactive steps to identify significant issues within the organization, determine root cause and seek resolution.

3. AKNG Memorandum, 9 September 2013, subject: Sensing Session Results from the 168th Air Refueling Wing (ARW), summarized the results of a sensing session conducted on 20 August 2013 that included officers and enlisted members of the 168th ARW. MG Katkus was one of three members of the command group that facilitated these sessions which identified twenty-one (21) issue areas and indicated that officers and non-commissioned officers (NCOs) wanted professional development and yearned for a level of trust that empowered them to run the unit within set parameters.

4. AKNG Memorandum, 12 January 2014, subject: Sensing Session Results from the 38th Troop Command (TC), identified sixteen (16) issue areas and indicated constructive feedback, developmental counseling and mentoring was desired at all levels.

5. AKNG Memorandum, 12 January 2014, subject: Sensing Session Results from the 297th Battlefield Surveillance Brigade (BfSB), identified fourteen (14) issue areas and indicated positive constructive feedback was essential in developing leaders.

6. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

(b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

7. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC), AKNG, testified that since assuming her SARC position all cases of sexual assault have been reported to the US Army Criminal Investigation Command (CID), the National Guard Bureau (NGB) Office of Complex Investigation (OCI), or AK State law enforcement authorities. Any adverse criminal or administrative action against suspects is either pending or investigated by State of AK civilian law enforcement. Of the eleven cases reported to (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) in the last two years, ten were unrestricted reports and one was a restricted report. There were no instances where any sexual assault incident was covered up by MG Katkus or the chain of command (CoC).

8. U.S. Army Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program (SHARP) Reporting Options, states unrestricted reporting procedures allow a Soldier who is sexually assaulted to access medical treatment, counseling, and an official investigation of the allegation. A restricted report involves confidential disclosura of the crime of sexuel esseult to specifically identified individuals (the SARC, VA, chaplain, or a healthcare provider) in order for tha victim to receive appropriate medical care and treatment end counseling without triggering the official investigative process by CID, NGB OCI or civilian law enforcement.

9. Chief, National Guerd Bureau Inatruction (CNGBI) 0400.01 (Chiaf, National Guerd Bureau Office of Complex Administrativa Investigationa), 30 July 2012, states the Office of the Chief, National Guard Bureau (OCNGB) will establish an Office of Complex Administrative Investigations under the National Guard Bureau-Chief Counsel (NGB-JA/OI). At the request of The Adjutants General (TAG) of the 54 States, Territories end the District of Columbia, the NGB OCI will provida apecially trained personnel to perform complex administrative investigations involving alleged reports of sexuel assault with a NG nexua. These investigations mey include reports of sexual essault made by and against members of the National Guard while they ere not in federal atatus. Investigations regarding allegationa of sexual assault against military members performing duty in e federal status will be investigated by e Military Criminal Investigetive Organization, such as CID.

10. In an email, dated 11 March 2014, subject: Request for update on cases, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) sent e breakdown end current disposition of the aleven sexual assault cases thet have occurred since she assumed duties ea the SARC in Februery 2012.

11. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), AK Air Nationel Guerd (AKANG), testified MG Katkua waa very supportive of tha sexual herassment program. In a recent case, he directed en AR 15-6 investigation immediately after it was brought to hls attention. Every effort has been made to ensure sexual herassment allegations are reported and that each is investigated. No reported issues of sexual harassment were ever covered up by MG Katkus.

12. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) testified the command climate under MG Katkus was tense. He was awere of multiple instances of sexual aasault and sexuel harassment within tha AKNG. He ettributed it directly to MG Katkua, who had established a command climate that lacked trust and who had surrounded himself with senior officers and NCOs who were bullies.

13. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AK Army Support Chaplain, testified the command climate had improved a great deal since (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) former Chief of Staff (CofS), AKNG, departed. Since he had been in the AKNG, there were e few incidents of sexuel assault and sexual harassment. He personally worked with one male end one femele Soldier from Fort Greely. The female Soldier's case was being investigated by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) and the male Soldier did not want to be identified.

[IO Note: Since the male Soldier did not want to be identified, he was essentially filing a restricted report that would not have triggered an investigation by law enforcement or the CoC.]

14. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) Executive Officer, 38th Troop Command (TC), testified when matters of sexual assault or harassment occurred within the command, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) briefed MG Katkus on them. There were no instances where MG Katkus failed to act on sexual misconduct. The current command climate had improved since the arrival of (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) who created an environment conducive to reporting sexual misconduct.

15. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) AKNG, testified the command climate was low on trust under MG Katkus. Many individuals did not like MG Katkus' leadership style; however, he did nothing wrong or illegal. MG Katkus did a good job and supported his own vision for the (b)(6) AKNG. MG Katkus did not say anything negative or use abusive language with anyone. MG Katkus provided the (b)(6) an opportunity to complete the mission without being micromanaged.

16. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) State Safety Officer, AKNG, testified the command climate seemed positive. MG Katkus placed emphasis on SARCs and ensured the chaplains were aware of any issues raised. MG Katkus promoted an ethical and moral climate by emphasizing his top three priorities: recruiting and retention, standards and safety.

17. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) Commander (CDR), 297th Battlefield Surveillance Battalion (BfSB), testified the command climate had changed to an environment where victims felt free to come forward regarding sexual assault and sexual harassment incidents about two years ago. He attributed the change to the Army's focus on SARCs and unit victim advocates throughout the Army. He believed MG Katkus took sexual harassment and assaults seriously, and supported the Army's program. MG Katkus seemed disassociated with the truth of what was going on at the Soldier level. MG Katkus was upset about a sexual assault / sexual harassment article that appeared in a local Anchorage, AK, newspaper.

[IO Note: When (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) alluded to MG Katkus disassociation at the Soldier level, he was referring to MG Katkus visiting Soldiers. He was not referring to matters of sexual assault and harassment.]

18. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) G-3, AKNG, testified MG Katkus made his position against sexual assault and sexual harassment widely known. The leadership at all levels had the assets to deal with such incidents when they arose. There were no inhibitors or implied obstacles that prevented someone from reporting an incident.

19. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, testified the current command climate was hostile under the leadership of (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) Chief of Staff (CoS), AKNG. MG Katkus empowered (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) to essentially run the command. MG Katkus chose to keep a low profile and allow (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) to interact with the staff instead of him. MG Katkus had not done anything to implement or foster a healthy command climate; however, he never blew up or lost his cool and was always very professional.

20. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) CDR, 38th TC, testified the current command climate was very positive. Two years ago, the command climate was challenging, and there were some toxic leaders within the command that have since moved on. MG Katkus allowed officers the flexibility to lead and held a town hall meeting to give leaders an open forum to address concerns. Yet, no issues were specifically directed at MG Katkus.

[IO Note: In November 2009, MG Katkus assumed duties as TAG, and, prior to that, he was the Assistant Adjutant General (ATAG), AKNG.]

21. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) CoS, AKANG, testified most AKNG service members understood the process to report incidents and had received training on the various reporting options available. The current command climate was fairly calm.

[IO note: The acronym for Air Force Lieutenant Colonel is LtCol.]

22. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) CDR, 168th Air Refueling Wing, AKANG, testified the current command climate was very good. There was a great relationship between the Army and Air AKNG. MG Katkus was very proactive in bringing the two entities together. MG Katkus was direct, clear and concise and treated his staff well. Due to his high expectations for people and his command presence, MG Katkus could be intimidating. There was no doubt who was in charge when he walked into a room. MG Katkus was aggressive and proactive in sexual assault prevention and other high profile events that occurred within the AKNG. MG Katkus did everything possible to foster a healthy command climate.

23. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, testified she was sexually assaulted in March 2010 by an AKNG member. The following day, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) filed a restricted report with (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) SARC, AKNG, and was treated at a local sexual assault response treatment center. Since the report was restricted, it did not trigger an investigation. (b)(6) & (b)(7) notified MG Katkus of the incident with no personal indentifying information. In January 2013, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) changed her report from restricted to unrestricted. The Anchorage Police Department

(APD) would not pursue the case because they did not feel they could prove the charges against the suspect beyond a reasonable doubt. After APD's refusal to investigate, MG Katkus contacted the NGB OCI to conduct an investigation.

24. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C), Alaska State Judge Advocate, in an email, dated 19 March 2014, stated that APD declined to investigate (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) case and it was returned to the AKNG. MG Katkus requested NGB OCI investigate and they substantiated against the AKNG member. The NGB OCI investigation was sent to the Alaska State Attorney General's Office and they declined to prosecute. The matter is currently being reviewed for adverse administrative actions against the AKNG member.

ANALYSIS / DISCUSSION:

1. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) alleged the command climate in the AKNG was not conducive to encouraging victims to report incidents of sexual assault / sexual harassment. In addition, they alleged that no adverse action was being taken against suspects by the chain of command (CoC).

2. Evidence indicated that, over the past two years, MG Katkus was aware of at least eleven sexual assault cases by the SARC. All eleven sexual assault cases involved military victims; seven cases involved an AKNG member suspect and four involved a civilian suspect. When informed of sexual assault allegations, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) ensured prompt action was taken on all cases. MG Katkus enabled (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) to do this and took action as appropriate on disposition of these cases. The evidence also indicated that the sexual assaults alleged by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) were investigated by the appropriate authorities (See SARC spreadsheet, TAB C8). (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) testified there were no instances where a sexual assault incident was covered up or delayed by MG Katkus.

3. The spreadsheet provided by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) detailed the eleven sexual assault cases she has worked since becoming the SARC, AKNG.

a. Alaska State Statute, §26.05 (Military Code of Alaska) dictates that any offense committed by a member of the AKNG shall be investigated by Alaska civilian law enforcement and prosecuted in the Alaska civilian criminal system. If the suspect was a member of the AKNG, all criminal investigation and prosecution is required to be handled by Alaskan civil authorities. However, MG Katkus would be able to take adverse administrative action against members of the AKNG. Evidence indicated that MG Katkus had taken adverse administrative action and is considering adverse action in a sexual assault case substantiated by NGB OCI. Additionally, the AKNG facilitated the transfer of victims, at their request, to new duty locations.

b. The evidence provided by the SARC indicated, with the exception of one case investigated by CID, because the AKNG suspect was believed to be in a Federal status at the tima, the remainder of the investigations were conducted by the AK state law enforcement agencies. Four of AKNG sexual assaull victims reported that tha suspect was e civilian not associated with the AKNG. MG Katkus had no ability to taka any action against the civilian suspects.

[IO Note: The below Alaska Steta Statutes clarifies that the Alaska National Guard is tha militia and any offenses committed by a militia member must be prosecuted by civilian authorities.

Alaska State Statute § 26.05.10 (Alaska Militia Established), states the Alaska militia specifically includes the Alaska National Guard.

Alaska State Statute § 26.05.300 (Statement of Policy on Military Justice), states "[a]n offense committed by a member of the militia, organized or unorganized, shall ba tried in civil courts and prosecuted by civil authorities axcept offenses of a purely military nature."]

4. The majority of the witnassas testified the command climate was conducive to victims reporting incidents of sexual assault / sexual harassment. One witness indicated the sensing sessions ellowed the voice of the service member to be heard and gave tham an opportunity to address eny of their issues of concern.

5. Ten out of twelve witnesses testified thet MG Katkus actively supported and placed emphasis on the prevention of sexual assault and harassment. Evidence indicated that MG Katkus did not attempt to cover up any sexual haressment or essault cases and that through his SARC, sexual assault cases allegations were referred to the appropriate authorities with jurisdiction.

6. Ona witness testified MG Katkus was upset when he became aware of the sexual assault / sexual harassment article that appeared in tha Anchorage, AK, newspaper. The witness stated that MG Katkus felt that the individuals going outside of the chain of command speaking with reporters did not hava all of the facts and were not aware of the actions taken place by the AKNG.

7. Six of the nine witnesses question about the ovarall command climete testified that under MG Katkus the commend climate was good or had improved over time. Of the three witness who believed there was an issue with the command climate, one believed that the climate was tense, anothar witness believed the climate was low on trust under MG Katkus, and one witness testified MG Katkus did not promote an ethical and moral climata because he allowed (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) too much latitude in the command. However, (b)(6) & (b)(7) is the senior Army commander and responsible for the day-to-day activities of the AKARNG, and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) is the Chief of Staff for (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

[IO Note: (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) is the senior full time AGR officer for the AKNG. Therefore, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) played a significant decision making role within the organization as MG Katkus's representative throughout the week.]

8. From February 2013 to November 2013, the AKNG conducted four sensing sessions. During these sensing sessions, even when prompted, service members did not raise any issues or concerns regarding the command climate involving MG Katkus. Additionally, none of the sessions identified major concerns with regard to sexual assault / sexual harassment. In fact, according to (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) these sessions helped the AKNG "identify gaps in communication, answer questions about rumors and . . . improve command climate and build trust in the organization".

CONCLUSION: The preponderance of evidence indicated the command climate of the AKNG was conducive to victims reporting sexual assault / sexual harassment actions. Although some witnesses did not believe actions were being taken with regard to sexual assault / sexual harassment complaints, both the SARC and SEEM disputed these claims. The SARC and SEEM both testified that MG Katkus was involved and took immediate action to include requesting assistance from NGB when AK state law enforcement was not responsive. The preponderance of evidence also indicated the command climate in the AKNG was fair/good and moving in the right direction under MG Katkus.

OTHER MATTERS:

1. An Alaskan State Statute requires the prosecution of Alaska National Guard (AKNG) members in state courts except for "... offenses of a purely military nature." This limits the Adjutant General's ability to prosecute members for allegations of sexual assault and requires the AKNG to rely on state law enforcement and prosecutors to perform this function.

2. Senator Murkowski's letter to the DODIG indicated two additional issues that were not investigated.

a. Funds were misused within the AKNG. The complainants provided no further credible evidence of such an occurrence. However, DAIG had previously investigated and addressed the allegation of misuse of government funds within the AKNG in DAIG Case # DIG 12-60032.

b. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

(b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

3. Both (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) cite (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, in their testimony as a major source for their allegations. In a memorandum, dated 13 April 2012, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) alleged that MG Katkus covered up sexual assaults and protected rapists. A previous investigation (DAIG Case # DIG 12-60032) into the allegations made by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) was referred to CID and found not to be credible. In fact, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) testified he was aware of only one of the fourteen alleged sexual assault / sexual harassment issues referred to by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7) testified that, with the exception of (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) allegations of sexual assault / sexual harassment, some of which CID found not to be credible, he was unaware of any other allegation of sexual assault / sexual harassment not being reported to, and investigated by, MG Katkus or any other senior AKNG official.

4. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)
(b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

5. (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)
(b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. Record the allegation that MG Katkus failed to foster a healthy command climate as not substantiated.

2. Refer Other Matter Issue in paragraph 1 to the National Guard Bureau. Recommend they conduct a review to determine if this is an isolated issue or if it has a broader impact throughout the National Guard.

3. Take no further action on Other Matters paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5.

PRELIMINARY INQUIRY

NAMES/POSITIONS: MG Thomas H. Katkus, The Adjutant General, Alaska; (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG); (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKARNG; and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKARNG

1. ALLEGATIONS/CONCLUSIONS:

a. The Criminal Investigation Command (CID) determined the allegation MG Katkus covered up sexual assaults within the Alaska National Guard and protected rapists was not a credible complaint.

b. CID (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

c. CID (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

d. CID (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C)

2. BACKGROUND:

a. On 17 April 2012, Department of the Army Inspector General (DAIG) received a memorandum, prepared by (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) subject: Corruption within the AKNG, dated 13 April 2012, from (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKARNG. The memorandum alleged potential criminal activity by MG Katkus, (b)(6) & (b)(7) (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (EXHIBIT A)

[IO NOTE: (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) memorandum alleging criminal activity was extracted from DIG 12-00044.]

b. On 11 May 2012, after a thorough review, the alleged criminal activity was referred to CID for action as deemed appropriate. (EXHIBIT B)

c. On 6 February 2013, DAIG was notified by CID of the results of their inquiry into the alleged criminal activity reportedly involving MG Katkus, (b)(6) & (b)(7) and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) (EXHIBIT C)

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY. DISSEMINATION IS PROHIBITED EXCEPT AS AUTHORIZED BY AR 20-1.

(1) The CID investigation revealed the sexual assault victims reported the assaults to law enforcement and not (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) as he alleged. During his interview, (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) provided no details that would corroborate his allegation that he notified law enforcement of several sexual assaults or that MG Katkus protected rapists.

REPORT OF INVESTIGATIVE INQUIRY

APR - 8 2014

NAME / POSITION: Major General (MG) Thomas H. Katkus, The Adjutant General (TAG), Alaska National Guard (AKNG)

ALLEGATION / FINDING: The allegation that MG Katkus failed to foster a healthy command climate was not substantiated.

BACKGROUND:

1. On 19 June 2013, Alaska (AK) Senator (SEN) Lisa Murkowski referred a complaint regarding the command climate of the AKNG to the Department of Defense Inspector General (DODIG). (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, and (b)(6) & (b)(7)(C) AKNG, alleged the command climate was not conducive to encouraging Soldiers to report allegations (specifically of sexual assault / sexual harassment) due to fear of reprisal or no action by the chain of command (CoC).

2. On 26 June 2013, DODIG forwarded the complaint to the Department of the Army Inspector General Agency (DAIG).

3. On 15 July 2013, The Inspector General directed an investigation by DAIG.

STANDARD: Army Regulation (AR) 600-20 (Army Command Policy), 18 March 2008, Rapid Action Review 27 April 2010, states in paragraph 2-1(l) that every leader will foster a healthy command climate.

OTHER MATTERS:

1. An Alaskan State Statute requires the prosecution of Alaska National Guard (AKNG) members in state courts except for "... offenses of a purely military nature." This limits the Adjutant General's ability to prosecute members for allegations of sexual assault and requires the AKNG to rely on state law enforcement and prosecutors to perform this function.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. Record the allegation that MG Katkus failed to foster a healthy command climate as not substantiated.

2. Refer Other Matter Issue in paragraph 1 to the National Guard Bureau. Recommend they conduct a review to determine if this is an isolated issue or if it has a broader impact throughout the National Guard.

3. Take no further action on Other Matters paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Our team is diligently reviewing the assessment report and currently the matter is undergoing a legal review in our office. Once that is complete we will forward the draft report to you for comment as you deem appropriate. Thereafter, those comments, if any, will be addressed and the team leadership will be ready to travel to AK to brief the governor in early to mid Aug. Accordingly if you would provide possible briefing dates it would be greatly appreciated. Likewise, if the governor will be in this area sometime in Aug we could, if he prefers, meet here. Cindy, as you know the assessment team reviewed the results of the survey to determine whether or not individuals could be identified through the comments submitted. We spoke with the NG State IG, who was aware of the survey release to the leadership but stated that he was not aware of any complaints from individuals regarding their participation.

In all there were 1011 respondents to the survey each responded to five questions resulting in 5055 written comments. Of these comments we distilled the following:

The Assessment Team could identify the person writing the comment in 3 instances. The Assessment Team could identify who the person writing the comment was talking about in 15 instances.
The Assessment Team believes that in 22 instances an individual making a comment could be identified with some level of forensic analysis by the AKNG, however the Assessment Team could not identify the individual. Additionally, the leadership was specifically identified in a negative manner in 58 instances and positively identified in 16 instances.

Our team is diligently reviewing the assessment report and currently the matter is undergoing a legal review in our office. Once that is complete we will forward the draft report to you for comment as you deem appropriate. Thereafter, those comments, if any, will be addressed and the team leadership will be ready to travel to AK to brief the governor in early to mid Aug. Accordingly if you would provide possible briefing dates it would be greatly appreciated. Likewise, if the governor will be in this area sometime in Aug we could, if he prefers, meet here. We are available to discuss at your convenience.

Dear Mr. Hao,

Thank you for your letters and for taking time to share your concern on behalf of the nation. Like you, I believe elected officials at every level of government must support and defend the United States Constitution and the natural liberties it enshrines. My Administration has fought to protect Alaskans' rights against the federal government when it oversteps its legal bounds, and we will continue working to ensure the federal government does not encroach into powers reserved to the states. Washington, DC does not understand the uniqueness and vastness of Alaska and most likely never will; however, I will continue our efforts to build a better, brighter future for all Alaskans under the rule of law.

I have been reading the book you recommended – The Liberty Amendments – and reflecting on the concepts it presents regarding a convention of the states. As you may know, initiating this process would require action by the Legislature. It is my understanding that some Alaska legislators attended the gathering you mentioned in Mount Vernon and have filed legislation on the issue this session. Accordingly, you may wish to share your views with legislators. You can track the progress of House Joint Resolution 22 on the Legislature's website at http://w3.legis.state.ak.us/.

I appreciate hearing from you.

Ms. Julie Kitka
President
Alaska Federation of Natives
1577 C Street, Suite 300
Anchorage, AK 99501

Dear Ms. Kitka,

Thank you for your letter and resolution on behalf of the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) requesting immediate pardons for Marvin Roberts, Eugene Vent, Kevin Pease, and George Frese. I appreciate AFN's concerns, and the State shares its interest in fair and accurate outcomes from the criminal justice system. Alaska Statutes provide for a pardon in the form of executive clemency, which means the penalties for the offenses are excused. Executive clemency is an extraordinary remedy, which should, in nearly every instance, only be considered after judicial remedies are exhausted and the facts thoroughly investigated.

There are several reasons for my position. First, executive clemency overturns the decisions of fellow Alaskans sitting as jurors. I have tremendous respect for everyday Alaskans taking the juror's oath to decide a case based solely on the evidence presented to them. Jurors are instructed by the judge to apply the highest legal standard of "beyond a reasonable doubt" to their decisions. Second, criminal defendants are not the only people involved in the criminal justice system. Victims and their families rely on the process to provide justice and a level of finality and closure for their losses. Finally, it is important to respect co-equal branches of government. The fair and constitutional conduct of criminal trials, appeals, and post-conviction relief is committed to the Judicial Branch.

In this case, several appeals and post-trial motions have been filed by the defendants, but judicial remedies have not been exhausted. Late last year, the Alaska Innocence Project filed new applications for post-conviction relief on behalf of the defendants alleging grounds that have never before been asserted. The Attorney General and the Department of Law opted to conduct an independent review based on the new information presented in the pending post-conviction applications. The Department of Law in turn requested that the Alaska Bureau of Investigation review the new information and present its findings to the Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals (OSPA) in the Department of Law.

The pending motion for post-conviction relief is still in the opening pleading stage. Discovery and hearing stages will likely follow. Superior Court Judge Lyle heard the arguments of both sides and decided the prosecutors must respond by May 15, 2014. Judge Lyle set this date, and I am not in a position to second guess his decision. At this time, the Department of Law is still conducting a thorough review of the extensive amount of evidence, including statements by defendants, testimony from numerous witnesses from three separate trials, physical evidence, multiple appeals and motions for relief previously filed, and statements and affidavits in the current motion by the defendants. I have directed the Attorney General to make sure adequate resources are committed to reduce or eliminate delays and have confidence he will do so.

Regarding clemency, current Alaska Statutes require that the Governor and Parole Board work together to ensure any decision on clemency is based on a thorough review of the case and made in deference to victims and their families. And, in cases where an individual may receive clemency, the offense will still remain on the criminal record, but with a notation that a clemency was granted. Should any of the defendants wish to be considered for clemency, they can apply at any time; however each individual is required to personally make formal application to the Parole Board in which he must list separately all criminal offenses the person is seeking relief for, and the reasons why clemency should be granted for each criminal conviction.

I appreciate hearing from AFN regarding this situation, and trust you will understand the importance of being thorough in these circumstances where a young boy was murdered and where Alaskans have been incarcerated.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell
Governor

The Honorable Tom Vilsack
Secretary
United States Department of Agriculture
1400 Independence Avenue SW
Washington, DC 20250

Dear Secretary Vilsack,

Washington, DC politics and the influence of environmental groups on the Tongass National Forest (Tongass) have left a trail of broken promises, Alaskan families, and small businesses in their wake. Promises broken by the Federal Government include agreeing to exempt the Tongass from the roadless rule; implementation of the current Tongass Land Management Plan (TLMP); and compliance with the federal statutory obligation under the Tongass Timber Reform Act (TTRA) to meet the demand for timber.

Alaskans, including myself, have little faith that DC cares about Alaskan jobs and families. For example, the Viking sawmill could add a second shift of workers if the USFS would increase the supply of timber to meet demand.

I have repeatedly said Alaskans need an "all of the above" land management plan for the Tongass. The current TLMP allows for both old-growth and young-growth logging. There is no reason (other than red tape and political ideology) that both types of logging cannot continue to occur for another ten years when the current TLMP must be revised. Section 6(f)(5)(A) of the National Forest Management Act. In fact, I believe the focus of USFS efforts should be on building three years of timber supply of old-growth timber, at existing demand levels.

Despite my deep concerns, I believe in participating in every advocacy opportunity that can be constructive. The Tongass Advisory Committee (TAC) offers a venue for discussions on jobs, families, and the needs of Southeast Alaska for renewable energy, transportation, utility corridors, and other important topics. In that regard, I am willing to direct State employees to participate and contribute to the process so long as it remains fair and there is no predetermined outcome.

I am nominating my Chief Forester, Chris Maisch, and Forester Clarence Clark to represent the State of Alaska. Both Chris and Clarence have decades of service and experience with the Tongass. I am also nominating my Director of State and Federal Relations, Kip Knudson, as an alternate. Their applications are attached.

The State will not participate in the TAC if the industry seats are not filled by Alaskans actively engaged in logging the Tongass or Alaskans with experience logging in the Tongass. After all, it's their jobs, their businesses, and their families at stake.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell
Governor

RE: Request for Investigator, Office of Complex Administrative Investigations

Dear General Grass,

I request the detailing of a CNGB Complex Investigation Program Investigator to investigate open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard. I request that you issue a detailed memorandum allowing the investigator to act under my authority to gain access to State personnel and records to the extent allowed under State law and regulation.

I am extremely proud of our Alaska National Guard members and their professionalism in carrying out their duties. However, I remain deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard. Not only are individuals victimized and traumatized in these circumstances, but collectively our National Guard is harmed – from morale to mission damage.

In recent years, Adjutant General Thomas Katkus has emphasized strong systems for reporting, investigating, and tracking such cases; and he has raised awareness among Guard members to these issues through "sensing" sessions. Information I recently learned, however, compels me to write and seek an outside look at our Alaska National Guard's training, reporting, investigations, and case dispensation practices related to the areas I outlined above. Where a number of matters were referred to civilian law enforcement who declined to investigate, I ask you to review those matters, as well. In my estimation, the review should include the National Guard's command structure and its responses to these cases, up to and including TAG.

I am willing to meet with your investigator, along with my Chief of Staff, Mike Nizich, in order to assist in planning and conducting the investigation. I have directed my Chief of Staff to ensure your investigator receives the full cooperation of State National Guard personnel. I have directed my

Attorney General, Michael Geraghty, to provide legal advice as necessary. When the investigation is complete, I will make myself or my designee available for an Out-Brief with the investigator. Your investigator will receive full cooperation from all units, guardsmen and women, and civilians within the Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs who are under my authority. If your investigator receives resistance in regard to the investigation from any individual under my authority, please have your investigator contact my Chief of Staff or my Deputy Chief of Staff, Cindy Sims.

Your investigator's point of contact is Chief of Staff Mike Nizich at 907-465-3500 or Deputy Chief Cindy Sims at 907-269-7450. They will provide cell numbers once initial contact has been made.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

February 28, 2014

The President
The White House

Dear Mr. President:

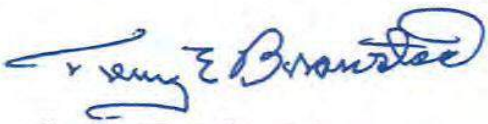
The nation's governors strongly oppose the potential cuts to the Army National Guard advocated by the U.S. Army's fiscal 2015 budget request.

For more than a decade, our National Guard has demonstrated it is a cost-effective, operational force that is critical to our national security at home and abroad.

As commanders-in-chief, we appreciate the need to reorganize, restructure and modernize the military to meet new threats and economic realities. All sectors of the military need to be involved in meeting the targets set by the Budget Control Act of 2011 and the realities of having fewer forces engaged abroad. In doing so, however, the Army Guard's operational capabilities and 350,000 end strength level must be preserved.

The Army's proposed cuts suggest a pre-2001 strategic reserve construct. Governors are extremely proud of the role that the National Guard plays in protecting this nation and its citizens. The modern National Guard is a highly experienced and capable combat force and an essential state partner in responding to domestic disasters and emergencies. A return to a pre-9/11 role squanders the investment and value of the Guard and discredits its accomplishments at home and as an active combat force.

Two years ago we opposed similar efforts to dramatically cut personnel and equipment from the Air National Guard. Congress subsequently chose not to impose the cuts and called for a National Commission on the Structure of the Air Force. That commission recently concluded that the Guard is a cost-effective and invaluable force that should be a critical component of the total force structure. The commission's conclusions and the ongoing Army debate strengthen the case for a similar independent review of the Army's future force structure and active and reserve component mix.



We respectfully request that you reconsider proposed cuts to the Army National Guard and changes to the Guard's combat aviation capabilities and that you work with us to fashion solutions that provide a scalable, cost-effective force that best serves the interests of our nation.

Sincerely,

Mary Fallin

March 3, 2014

Mr. Brad Razook
President and Chief Executive Officer
Flint Hills Resources, LLC
P.O. Box 2917
Wichita, KS 67201

Dear Brad,

I learned of an email that Alaska legislators and others received February 25, 2014, containing an attachment with conditions entitled "North Pole Refinery Proposal" (the proposal). In this email, Jeff Cook, Regional Director External Affairs for Koch Companies, wrote that, "These conditions will require a dedicated and timely effort by Governor Parnell and his administration…" Though I never received the proposal directly from your company, I did want to timely get back with you on the proposal.

Your proposal primarily deals with issues related to contamination, Flint Hills Resources (FHR), and a potential buyer. I will summarize your company's proposal:

- FHR proposes it be released from all liability for contamination both on and off-site;
- FHR proposes the State indemnify FHR from contribution claims (which would include those from down-gradient property owners);
- FHR proposes a new buyer take over liability for on-site contamination and remediation of on-site contamination and be relieved from liability for all off-site contamination; FHR will reflect this transfer of liability for on-site contamination via a reduced sales price;
- FHR proposes the State use on-site clean up numbers established in 2006;
- FHR proposes the State relieve a buyer from remediation requirements for future spills they may cause;
- FHR proposes it not be held responsible for spills the buyer may have in the future;
- FHR proposes it contribute 10 percent (up to $25 million) of the cost for construction of a piped water system to owners of sulfolane contaminated property;
- FHR proposes an area-wide prohibition on use of groundwater be put in place (institutional control); and
- FHR proposes off-site projects requiring excavation dewatering of contaminated groundwater do not bear additional expense from dealing with the contamination.

FHR's proposal notes, "There is no question that the off-site sulfolane came from spills that happened when Williams owned the refinery and the state owned the land." While FHR attempts to shift all responsibility for contamination to Williams and the State, it would appear unlikely Williams would readily accept this responsibility. Williams and FHR have contractual agreements that must have addressed contamination claims, and there is the court's recent decision holding that FHR's claims against Williams are time-barred. In the court summary judgment decision it states FHR "knew, or should have discovered, that sulfolane was in the groundwater and moving as early as July 2004…." This appears to support the argument that the migration and impacts of the sulfolane contamination would not have been as great had FHR followed through with its responsibilities at the site.

Although it might be challenging to get all parties to agree to a quick and fair allocation of responsibility, I have directed the Attorney General and my Commissioners to make every practical effort to reach an agreement that will protect the jobs of workers at the refinery, protect the property owners from environmental and related harm, and fairly allocate responsibility among all potentially responsible parties.

FHR's proposal focuses exclusively on environmental matters. I will outline several specific concerns I have about FHR's approach to addressing these matters:

- The contamination plume continues to spread – it will be necessary to assure that the owners and tenants on properties that become contaminated in the future will be protected, even if piped water is provided to currently contaminated properties.
- The remediation feasibility study and costs of alternatives are not complete, nor is there a selected alternative, so it would be difficult for a buyer to know the potential costs of remediation that they may agree to.
- While we recognize a piped water system can be a solution, it is not clear that a piped water system is something impacted Alaskans will accept. The State and/or local government would need to contribute a significant portion of the cost of design and construction of a piped water system. The local government or community would need to pay for the ongoing operations of a piped water system.
- There may be legal barriers to area-wide institutional controls on groundwater use. If so, it could be done on each parcel of property but this would be very time consuming and expensive.
- The State cannot legally indemnify FHR from contribution claims.
- The State cannot commit to changing risk-based, site-specific clean up numbers, but does have the ability to allow contamination to remain in the ground or in the groundwater above clean up levels if exposures can be eliminated for on-site employees and off-site residents.
- While FHR wants to ensure that construction projects costs are not increased by contractors having to pay more for excavation dewatering (to treat sulfolane contaminated groundwater before disposal), FHR offers no solution to this problem nor explains why FHR should not be held responsible for these costs. Notwithstanding these concerns, however, the State is exploring methods to reduce these costs.
- FHR remains liable for the contamination under federal law.

At present, I have no direct evidence that a purchaser for the refinery actually stands waiting in the wings. Still, I have taken a giant step to clear a path for such a buyer, while protecting the interests of Alaskans.

Last week, I authorized the State of Alaska to utilize a Prospective Purchaser Agreement (PPA) for a prospective refinery buyer. In exchange for the new owner providing continued access, agreeing to certain use restrictions on the property, and conducting some remedial actions, the State would agree to a covenant not to sue the new owner as a "responsible party" under AS 46.03.822. FHR will remain responsible for contamination after the sale, but the State has made a path for a new buyer of the refinery. The buyer would not be burdened with the liability that FHR holds.

Additionally, I have asked my Attorney General and Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) Commissioner to engage FHR and Williams to address environmental liability. A good first step would be to assess the scope of the environmental liability, which may require a treatment feasibility study with cost estimates and a record of decision on the selected cleanup alternative. As FHR has appealed the groundwater cleanup level, this too will need to be resolved.

With a clear path for a willing buyer, there is no reason for FHR to hold up any potential purchase of the refinery. And, with a path to resolve environmental contamination through negotiation and public engagement, we should be able to provide some certainty on environmental contamination caused by both Williams and FHR. I will make teams available through the Attorney General and DEC Commissioner if you would like to resolve these issues in this way. Please have your point of contact call Chief of Staff Mike Nizich at 907-465-3500, and he will make sure we have the right people in the room for any discussion.

Sean Parnell

Dear Ms. Gordon,

Congratulations on your retirement! Thank you for over 28 years of faithful service to the State of Alaska.

Alaskans rely daily on the efforts of dedicated State employees. I appreciate your steadfast service, your support for coworkers, and your pursuit of excellence in fulfilling the mission of the Department of Natural Resources.

Your contribution in writing the Alaska Incident Business Management Handbook and your role in developing, implementing, and explaining fire business management policies has made you an asset to the Division of Forestry. Thank you for lending your energy and expertise to the future of our great state, and for your hard work in building an effective and responsive workplace for all Alaskans.

The time and effort you have contributed to the State will continue to yield benefits for years to come. May you and your family enjoy good health and prosperity, and may the years ahead continue to be rewarding.

Dear Matt & Cathie,

I was happy to be of help to Landon. Years ago when I was in fifth grade in Alaska I was doing a report on the State of Colorado. Officials in that state were good enough to share materials with me and it made a big impression on me. I, too, wanted Landon to know that in this big world-- he matters. Thanks for being parents who care so much for him. All the best,

Dear Representative Isaacson,

Thank you for your letters regarding the closure of the Flint Hills Resources refinery (FHR). The impacts of the closure are of utmost concern, not only to the region and the State, but to me personally.

As you and I have discussed in several conversations and in meetings with Interior legislators since FHR's announcement, we have been working on multiple fronts to identify opportunities to secure the futures of Alaskan families through a clean water supply and a refinery industry to add value and opportunities in-state.

We have proactively worked to ensure FHR employees will have job opportunities in Alaska. We have cleared a path for a buyer of the refinery to purchase it free of the liability FHR holds. You have been copied with my letter to FHR dated March 3, 2014, that outlines several of our concerns related to FHR's proposal, and so I will not restate those here. The Attorney General is preparing to file a lawsuit that will determine liability and responsibility for the environmental pollution, something left undone by FHR when they had the opportunity.

We are also considering numerous proposals to ensure existing Alaska refineries can remain profitable. Ideas include the ones in your letter and a number of others we can discuss shortly. My Administration and I have worked daily on this matter since we were made aware of the closure, and we will continue to work with you and the Interior Delegation on a way forward that is best for Alaskans.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Tom Vilsack
Secretary
United States Department of Agriculture
1400 Independence Avenue SW
Washington, DC 20250

Dear Secretary Vilsack,

Washington, DC politics and the influence of environmental groups on the Tongass National Forest (Tongass) have left a trail of broken promises, Alaskan families, and small businesses in their wake. Promises broken by the federal government include agreeing to exempt the Tongass from the roadless rule; implementation of the current Tongass Land Management Plan (TLMP); and compliance with the federal statutory obligation under the Tongass Timber Reform Act (TTRA) to meet the demand for timber.

Alaskans, including myself, have little faith that DC cares about Alaskan jobs and families. For example, the Viking sawmill could add a second shift of workers if the USFS would increase the supply of timber to meet demand.

I have repeatedly said Alaskans need an "all of the above" land management plan for the Tongass. The current TLMP allows for both old-growth and young-growth logging. There is no reason (other than red tape and political ideology) that both types of logging cannot continue to occur. I believe the focus of USFS efforts should be on building a three-year supply of old-growth timber to meet demand levels.

Despite my deep concerns, I believe in participating in every advocacy opportunity that can be constructive. The Tongass Advisory Committee (TAC) offers a venue for discussions on jobs, families, and the needs of Southeast Alaska for renewable energy, transportation, utility corridors, and other important topics. In that regard, I am willing to direct State employees to participate and contribute to the process so long as it remains fair and there is no predetermined outcome.

I am nominating my Chief Forester, Chris Maisch, and Forester Clarence Clark to represent the State of Alaska. Both Chris and Clarence have decades of service and experience with the Tongass. I am also nominating my Director of State and Federal Relations, Kip Knudson, as an alternate. Their applications are attached.

The State will not participate in the TAC if the industry seats are not filled by Alaskans actively engaged in logging the Tongass or Alaskans with experience logging in the Tongass. After all, it's their jobs, their businesses, and their families at stake.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

Dear Tanar,

Thank you for your email inviting me to share my views regarding student safety for your school project. I take the issue of student safety very seriously, and I believe decisions about school security are best handled at the local level. Unique circumstances, differences, and needs among Alaska's smaller rural schools and larger urban schools, makes it difficult for the State to effectively specify a "one-size-fits-all" solution for every school.

Armed officers already provide security in Alaskan schools, such as in the Anchorage School District. This approach utilizes Anchorage Police Department officers in their high schools. During last year's legislative session, I championed dollars for security upgrades of all kinds in the schools. I left the decision on where to spend that money to the local districts. Parents, school administrators, and school boards in local districts are best able to decide how to ensure student safety and should have the freedom to do so.

Although I have not heard any recent discussions related to tracking chips being placed on students, this seems an intrusive and invasive method of keeping tabs on our young people. I do not support this measure.

Congratulations on earning a Nikiski High School Academic Letter! We created the Alaska Performance Scholarship for hardworking students such as yourself, to incentivize and provide opportunities for students with college or career and technical training. If you and your classmates are not already familiar with this great scholarship, I would encourage you all to check it out at http://aps.alaska.gov. Major General Mike Shields
Commanding General
United States Army Alaska
724 Postal Service Loop 5000
Joint Base Elemendorf-Richardson, AK 99505-5000

Dear Major General Shields,

Thank you for coming to Juneau to address the Alaska Legislature's Joint Armed Services Committee and for meeting with me.

Our state has a long and important historical relationship with the Army. I have committed to continuing to build on our relationship, creating a stronger future for the military in Alaska.

As our relationship continues to grow and we increase our partnership in projects, we will need to address reasonable public use of these projects. Some project developments will be understandably completely off-limits for public use, but others could have limited public access. It is my goal to establish a group of senior staff to work through these issues in a proactive manner.

A project development that could fall into the limited public use category would be the bridge over the Tanana River. The State of Alaska paid nearly 50 percent of the cost, and we are very proud of this project. It is the longest bridge in the state, sets up reliable access, and improves the future use of the Joint Pacific Alaska Range Complex (JPARC).

I understand that the bridge leads directly to land designated for military use, and I respect the need to protect our citizens and the military from random access to that land. What I would like to establish is conditional use of the bridge to allow access to State land on the other side of the Tanana River during moose hunting season. The season opens on September 1 and closes September 25.

I would like for our staffs to work together to determine how this could be accomplished. I have assigned this task to my Special Counsel, Randy Ruaro; Department of Natural Resources Deputy Commissioner Ed Fogels, and Department of Military and Veterans Affairs Deputy Commissioner McHugh Pierre. Please let me know with whom you wish for them to work with to address the United States Army Alaska's (USARAK) concerns.

I appreciate your commitment to Alaska. Together, we will continue to be a shining example of civilian-military partnership.

Dear Mayors Hopkins, Brower, Navarre, and Cobb,

Thank you for your letter of February 11, 2014, regarding your local governments' concerns related to construction and operation of the Alaska LNG Project. As you know, I am a strong supporter of getting Alaska's gas to Alaskans and am diligently working to maximize the benefit of that gas resource for all Alaskans. Your letter expressed several concerns I will address here.

First, you indicated, "We have become concerned about the lack of information provided to municipalities regarding the impacts of the ongoing negotiations, particularly local government concessions..." No local government concessions have been negotiated, so no current impacts on local governments are at hand.

On a related note, you expressed concern about some future negotiations altering property taxes paid on existing infrastructure, "including that used in oil exploration, production and transportation." You want to be assured that the terms of a "fiscal deal on the gas pipeline will not impact taxes on existing property."

I understand the importance to local government of property tax revenues, and I share your concern that the overall affect of any resource project, like the Alaska LNG Project, brings a net benefit to Alaskan communities. These are legitimate concerns, and I will work with you to address them.

Your letter seems to request that individual local governments become a "party" to any agreement and be treated in negotiations as such. This certainly differs from my earlier conversation with Mayor Navarre, who indicated he understood how impracticable this notion would be. I am sure you understand that having each municipality directly "negotiate and agree to terms" with the producers, TransCanada-Alaska, and the State would be as impracticable as having 60 legislators sitting at the table in direct negotiations.

Legislators, like mayors, represent constituencies benefited and impacted by any gas project, but legislators recognize that a commercial agreement and ultimately construction of a gas project could never occur if they participated directly in negotiations. I suggest, instead, that just as we have provided for meaningful legislative review and input, that we work together to provide a meaningful way for local government concerns to be considered.

I plan to establish a more formal mechanism via an administrative order to assure municipal input and participation. Additionally, the phased legislative approval process assures local governments can influence outcomes now, and at least two more times in the future. First, when the Legislature is asked to commit to FEED (front-end engineering and design), and a second time when they are asked to make a Final Investment Decision for Alaskans leading to construction.

In other words, before local governments would experience any impact, or receive any direct benefit from construction, I will work to ensure collaborative efforts with the Executive Branch during negotiations, and there will also be multiple legislative approval points where concerns can be addressed.

Regards,

Sean Parnell

The Honorable Kurt Olson
Alaska State House of Representatives
State Capitol, Room 24
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Representative Olson,

Thank you for your letter of February 11, 2014, regarding recent actions the Board of Fisheries' (Board) took at their meeting on Upper Cook Inlet (UCI) finfish. Your thoughts echoed many comments my office has received from fishermen in your district. I share your concern for the many families and communities on the Kenai Peninsula that have suffered as a result of restrictions due to historic declines in Chinook salmon abundance.

The Board was created under Alaska Statute to serve as the State's regulatory body over the conservation and allocation of State fishery resources. As such, the Board's decisions are outside my authority as Governor. Neither I nor any Governor is permitted to direct Board management decisions. That said, I understand the demands UCI fisheries have been under for years, and the tremendous pressure this places on fishermen. I have made funding research on declines in Chinook abundance a priority for my Administration with the Chinook Salmon Research Initiative, and many other appropriations on increasing our knowledge of UCI salmon stocks. Along with Department of Fish and Game (ADF&G) staff, my Special Assistant for Fisheries, Stefanie Moreland, attends every Board meeting in order to be available for discussion and keep me apprised of Board decisions.

I asked ADF&G to meet with you to go over the changes made to the UCI management plans, and understand that you have already met with Commissioner Campbell. ADF&G will also make every possible effort to inform stakeholders about how the Board's decisions are expected to impact management in the coming year. I appreciate your understanding of the limitations within which ADF&G must operate. ADF&G will continue to advance assessment programs and conduct new research to provide managers and the Board improved understanding of factors affecting salmon abundance and productivity in the region.

I remain committed to the State's responsibility to provide fishing opportunity when a harvestable surplus exists, and to managing for abundance. If you would like to discuss this further, please do not hesitate to contact my scheduler, Janice Mason, at 465-3986.

Dear Mr. Krochalis,

In compliance with changes required by Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century (MAP-21), I officially designate the Municipality of Anchorage Public Transportation Department (PTD) to serve as the designated recipient for the Anchorage urbanized area and to administer the Enhanced Mobility of Seniors and Individuals with Disabilities Program (49 USC 5310). The Anchorage Metropolitan Area Transportation Solutions Transportation Policy Committee, acting as the designated policy board of the Metropolitan Planning Organization on January 23, endorsed this designation.

As the designated recipient, PTD will be responsible for developing a Program Management Plan and will also be responsible for administering the program by ensuring that all sub-recipients comply with federal requirements, notifying eligible local entities of funding availability, developing a program selection process, determining project eligibility, and developing the yearly program of projects. Furthermore, all projects will be included in the Coordinated Public Human Services Transportation Plan as required by MAP-21. The current coordinated transportation plan will be revised and adopted with representation from seniors, individuals with disabilities, representatives of public, private, non-profit transportation and human services providers, and other members of the public.

We appreciate PTD's ongoing support of Alaska's effort to reduce congestion, enhance safety, and provide individual mobility. Should you have any questions relating to this matter, please contact my transportation liaison, Jeff Jones, at 907-269-7450.

Dear Senators French, Ellis, Wielechowski, and Gardner,

I am in receipt of your February 5 letter. At the outset, let me express how much I appreciate the time and study that you are giving the Administration's proposal to commercialize Alaska's North Slope gas resource. I believe that we have a generational opportunity to provide Alaskans with an abundant source of energy far into the future, to create good jobs for Alaskans, and to anchor Alaska's economic base.

With respect to your question, it is not the State's intention to unnecessarily broaden the contract negotiations beyond what is necessary for the State and the project. Alignment of the parties is critical to the success of an LNG export project of this scope and magnitude. Project-enabling contracts negotiated between the parties will need to be of sufficient duration to support investment decisions of the parties for the Alaska LNG project, to permit realization of a competitive economic return, to enable necessary financing, and to support gas and LNG sales agreements.

We do, however, recognize that a healthy gas business will be inextricably linked to a healthy oil business, particularly in that oil development carries, and will continue to carry, many of the operating and other development costs on the North Slope. There will inevitably be some overlap with respect to tax issues; for example, dealing with allocation and treatment of lease expenditures. We could be adversely impacted in our negotiations by well-meaning restrictions placed on any discussion of indirect consequences of gas tax proposals.

Additionally, the Legislature will have the opportunity to approve the negotiated contracts before they are signed.

Last year's passage of the More Alaska Production Act set the stage for a stable and vibrant oil industry. Passage of SB 138 will do the same for development of our vast natural gas resources.

Again, I appreciate the close attention you are giving to this legislation and look forward to working with you to ensure that, together, we put the pieces in place to take advantage of the unique opportunity available to Alaska.

Hi Chris ... here are a couple of options for dates for the briefing:

August 22 - Anchorage
August 25-27- Juneau

Let me know if one of those dates will work for you all. If you're not sure on when the report will be finalized we could look at the first week of September; although I thought from our previous conversations you were looking to do the briefing in August.

Look forward to hearing back from you,

Hello Chris ...
DP
I appreciate you all looking into this.

I'm still working on getting some later dates in August for the briefing. I will hopefully have some other options for you in the next couple of days.

Let me know if you have any questions or feel it would be helpful to talk on the phone. I've been traveling and will be back in the office Thursday afternoon.

Cindy, as you know the assessment team reviewed the results of the survey to determine whether or not individuals could be identified through the comments submitted. We spoke with the NG State IG, who was aware of the survey release to the leadership but stated that he was not aware of any complaints from individuals regarding their participation.

In all there were 1011 respondents to the survey each responded to five questions resulting in 5055 written comments. Of these comments we distilled the following:

The Assessment Team could identify the person writing the comment in 3 instances. The Assessment Team could identify who the person writing the comment was talking about in 15 instances.
The Assessment Team believes that in 22 instances an individual making a comment could be identified with some level of forensic analysis by the AKNG, however the Assessment Team could not identify the individual. Additionally, the leadership was specifically identified in a negative manner in 58 instances and positively identified in 16 instances.

Your email below (showing an apparent violation of 5 USC 552a) along with an allegation that you maybe attempting to interfere in the reporting of federal violations of the law and applicable military regulations/instructions to officials required to accept such reports (Katkus) has been forwarded to the Dept of Defense Inspector General for further investigation. Investigators with the DOD IG will be discussing various topics with my client on Monday morning. Those discussions will be off site to ensure privacy. Please ensure your "client" is notified of this excused absence (he will likely not be absent but merely late to work on Monday) by BOI/PR as he assists in the official investigation(s) into wrong doing by officials of the Alaska National Guard and possibly the Governor of Alaska.

You are further advised that continued interference in the reporting of misconduct to federal officials (and/or their subsequent failure to properly act on the reporting) will not be tolerated by my client and may require us to obtain injunctive relief if it continues. Continued and repeated violations of 5 USC 552a by Alaska National Guard officials will be used to constitute evidence of 'intent' before the Federal District Court in Washington DC. Finally, ensure your 'clients' are advised of the anti reprisal provisions of federal law and military regulations - we shall deem any further reprisal/misconduct to be evidence of 'intent' for establishing the malicious nature of further retaliation. Particular emphasis should be placed on how LTC Wawersik, BG Bridges, and COL Parker interact with my client or operate in his vicinity as intimidation and unprofessional conduct will not be tolerated given his cooperating witness status against them.

You and your 'client(s)' should proceed with due notice of the above and act accordingly.

We deem your non denial of my question sent via email dated August 2, 2014 to be a constructive admission and we will proceed accordingly.

My client BOI/PR reasonably believes LTC Jane Wawersik specifically, and BG Bridges and BG Jorgensen possibly as 'co-conspirators', may have violated law and regulation.

We are requesting you obtain the assistance of federal law enforcement officers to investigate the allegations of misconduct that he wishes to make in detail to a sworn law enforcement officer with powers of arrest.

You are further placed on notice that your failure to properly protect my client from intimidation and unprofessional conduct by LTC Wawersik and COL Parker (and others) is evidence of you condoning such actions as you had been previously placed on written notice of such a toxic culture within your organization that a protective order needed to be issued to protect BOI/PR and his defense team. You're hereby ordered to immediately cease and desist the campaign against my client and you need to immediately issue a protective order ensuring my client or his military counsel isn't treated unprofessionally by your officers, and LTC Wawersik and COL Parker specifically.

A military investigation has cleared higher ups within the Alaska National Guard of mishandling sexual assault cases. The Army Inspector General's report, completed last month, also found that guard members did not feel concerned about the issue.

A brief summary of tha findings was made public Wadnesday in a one-page letter sent to Sen. Lisa Murkowski by the Department of Defense Inspector General, who had oversight over the investigation because senior officials within the Guard were under scrutiny. The agency finished its review early this month, and this week told Murkowski it concurred with the Army IG's findings.

The letter, signed by Acting Assistant Inspector General for Communications Larry D. Turner, concludes "...The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and othar AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents."

Gen. Thomas Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general and also serves as commissioner of the state Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, is satisfied with the Army findings, according to Maj. Candis Olmstead, public affairs director for the Alaska National Guard.

"Gen. Katkus is glad that the investigation was handled by an outside federal agency which has no agenda but ... to determine truth. He is cautiously guarded because there will always be room for improvement. But he is looking forward to seeing what areas we can improve upon," Olmstead said.

The IG's letter comes close to a year after Murkowski asked the independent agency to look into allegations that dysfunction within the Alaska National Guard's command climate impeded the reporting and investigation of sexual assaults, including attempts by some officials to try cover up incidents. Murkowski called for the investigation after two chaplains from the Alaska National Guard came to her seeking help. The chaplains have for some time tried to get help for victims they believe weren't helped the way they should have been.

Another victim advocate, Lt. Col. Ken Blaylock, who retired in 2012, has voiced similar concerns.

Since leaving the guard, Blaylock, a former National Guard commander and staff officer, has emerged as a tenacious whistleblower with a laundry list of complaints about the command structure. He said this week he was unconvinced by the IG report, which clears that command structure of allegations it mishandled and coverad up sexual assault cases.

"It's interesting that the inspector general did not interview me, since I have documentation which disproves his conclusions. I wonder how many other victims and witnesses he did not interview," said Blaylock.

The report has not yet been made public or released to Murkowksi.

In the letter to Murkowski, the inspector general indicates the report also addresses the climate in which Guard members are operating and whether they had concerns about sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting. "Climate sensing sessions" found no such concerns, according to Turner's letter.

Blaylock has asserted that climate surveys have in the past been used to smoke out anyone who might speak against the command structure. Out of fear of retaliation, people choose not to speak up, he said. Plus, Blaylock said, before the investigative team showed up, the Alaska National Guard held mandatory briefings in which the stories of some sexual assault situations were discredited, and procedures about proper handling of cases reiterated.

Olmstead said climate surveys are always anonymous and the survey-takers are not subject to retribution for their answers. Only if the participant chooses to put his or her name on it would their identity be known, she said. Surveys may help a new commander get a sense for the working climate within the unit, and different command levels may also review the surveys "to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment," she said.

Olmstead also said that while "all call" meetings did take place prior to the IG investigation and surveys, they were not convened for the purposes of skewing the results. All call meetings, which everyone attends, are not uncommon, and during those meetings information about process and procedure is often discussed. At no time were sexual assault stories or situations discredited, she said.

Blaylock has also questioned whether the IG actually had a chance to look at all of the evidence, meet with all of the victims and follow how all of the cases were handled, or if it followed only those cases the National Guard gave it access to.

In its inquiry, the Army IG found that 11 cases of alleged sexual assault were referred to Alaska law enforcement authorities — proper procedure since military code requires investigation and prosecution of cases involving Alaska National Guard suspects. It also found that Katkus took action against two suspects, each time after the sexual assault allegations were substantiated against Guard members. Consequences included being discharged and separated from the Guard.

"We definitely did not just pass on a select group of cases. All of the cases that have been reported have been documented. And all of that information was readily available to the inspector general's team," Olmstead said.

Everything follows policy and procedure, and everything is reported, she said.

She also pointed out that Blaylock, who has not actively been a part of the command for nearly two years, is not is a position to have firsthand information about current cases or the way things have been handled.

Through its public affairs chief, Bridget Ann Serchak, the Department of Defense Inspector General declined to comment on the scope or procedures employed during its investigation. If someone like Blaylock had continued concerns, they were welcome to call the IG's hotline and initiate a whistleblower complaint and through that process could be interviewed, she said.

A Murkowski spokesman said the senator is withholding comment until she has an opportunity to see the full report.

RTQ, Lisa Demer (ADN) 21 May 2014

Good evening, Lisa.

I had all but one of these answers to your questions (below) ready for you yesterday, and sent you an email stating that I was waiting for some additional information. I was fact-checking another document that shares the Alaska National Guard's data on sexual assaults so that I could provide it to you as well (it is attached).

However, I saw that your story ran last night, so I worked on other priorities today. Maybe this information will still be helpful if you do a follow up story about how allegations about our organization could not be substantiated by a Department of Defense inspector general team. In fact, the IG team stated that "The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any sexual assault incidents," and the sexual assault response coordinator "promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities."

If you are interested in doing a story on how our organization helps our members who are sexual assault victims, a service rarely provided in other agencies or organizations, I would be happy to provide you with additional details and put you in touch with our lead SARC.

Once the OCI assessment concludes, you may need more information from the Alaska National Guard. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions. I will do my best to find you answers. Depending on your questions and the people I have to contact for the answers, and their schedules and availability, it is fair to need about two business days to reply in some cases. I will reply as promptly as possible. And if you have a story deadline that I am aware of, I will try to expedite.

Answers to your questions:

1. The command climate survey is used for various purposes, such as when a unit gets a new commander and he or she would like a better understanding of the working climate within the unit, or periodically at different command levels to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment.

The current command climate survey that all members of the Alaska National Guard have been asked to take part in was requested by the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigation, in an effort to assess the overall health and wellness of the Alaska National Guard. The survey seeks members' input regarding the entire Alaska National Guard. The last day for members to complete the survey is June 1.

The survey is completely anonymous and no one can be personally identified in connection with their input.

2. The four phases of the OCI assessment are 1) Intake, 2) Interviews and Review, 3) Assessment and 4) Finalize Report.

Phase 1 Intake
-Command Climate Survey
-Data Collection

Phase 2 Interviews and Review
-OCI Ground Assessment begins
-Interviews with AKNG members, State Prosecutors office and Law Enforcement -Travel to identified/requested installations

Phase 3 Assessment
-OCI team returns to NGB to assess data and draft a preliminary report -OCI returns to Alaska as needed

Phase 4 Finalize Report
-Initial coordination may be made with JFHQ and/or Governor's Office at Governor's discretion -NGB-JA conducts legal review -Out brief provided at Governor's request

3. OCI team left Monday morning.

4. OCI team works for Chief of the National Guard Bureau, and they work in the Pentagon.

Please see the attached, which should provide additional helpful details.

From January 2009 to May 20, 2014, there were nine sexual assaults reported by victims in the Alaska National Guard whose offender was also a member of the Alaska National Guard. In the same timeframe, there were 26 sexual assaults reported by Alaska National Guard members whose offender was not in the AKNG, but was someone from the community. The bar graph illustrates the number of sexual assaults reported by AKNG victims and compares the number of non-member offenders with the number of AKNG offenders. The numbers and years all reflect when the assault occurred, not necessarily when the report occurred.

In the past seven months, two news writers have contacted the Alaska National Guard with questions regarding sexual assault in the organization. All additional news reports have recycled inaccurate, misconstrued information. Interviews with Alaska National Guard leadership have resulted in reports that left out key, relevant details.

Media and politicians who lack correct information and have chosen not to pursue accurate, current data have made multiple false and defamatory statements about the Alaska National Guard.

Every commentary printed to date in local media was written without the author contacting the Alaska National Guard for information. The authors did not give us an opportunity to correct inaccuracies or provide facts, but chose to regurgitate information that had already been reported without fact-checking. Others are using this sensitive subject for political posturing, disparaging our organization to advance their political or commentary careers as they generalize and exaggerate reality.

Here are the facts.

1. In the Alaska National Guard, there have been nine reports of sexual assault that have occurred in the past 5 ½ years in which the alleged perpetrator was a member of the organization. (This includes data from January 2009 through May 20, 2014.)

   A. Nine reported assaults in five-and-a-half years averages fewer than two reported assaults per year. In this 4,000-member organization, 1/20th of one percent of our membership has reported a sexual assault.
   B. Of these nine assaults, one occurred on duty at duty location. Three occurred on a military installation off-duty. Five occurred after hours, off-location.
   C. There was one report of a sexual assault committed by a member of the Alaska National Guard in 2013. There have been zero reports in 2014.

2. Nearly three-quarters of the sexual assaults reported since 2009 were committed by perpetrators who were not in the Alaska National Guard. We track these numbers because we want to help victims regardless of who assaulted them, or when the assault happened. Yet these numbers continue to be included in data that media and politicians are citing when they misrepresent our organization and suggest that we have such a high number of assaults in our ranks. They say we have a culture that tolerates this behavior.

How many other organizations have full-time support personnel dedicated to meeting with victims and helping them through the difficulties after being assaulted? We do.

We don't just point them to a counselor. Our sexual assault response coordinators and victim advocates are with victims every step of the way, to the extent that the victim allows.

Our sexual assault response coordinators go with victims to appointments, court dates, sit with them when they are being questioned by law enforcement, check in with them, and notify them of the status of their cases when possible. These services are offered to all victims who report, regardless of when the offense took place or who the perpetrator was.

3. Two chaplains shared with a reporter for an October 2013 print media article that there were victims in the Alaska National Guard who had not received proper, timely response from the organization, and victims were not taken seriously with regard to being sexually assaulted.

After that media coverage, the chaplains shared previously undisclosed details of their cases with our sexual assault response coordinator so that she could cross-reference the names with those victims who had reported to a victim advocate or a sexual assault response coordinator.

Every victim who sought support from our chaplains had either reported their assault and was receiving support from our sexual assault response coordinators; or chose to report only, but not seek further assistance; or chose not to report, while knowing that assistance is available.

All unrestricted reports had been referred to local law enforcement. Of the cases that local law enforcement did not pursue, one met criteria that allowed us to request further review by the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations. We referred that case, and they sent an OCI team to investigate further.

4. The Alaska National Guard does not have criminal justice authority over sexual assaults or other non-military criminal offenses in the way that active duty military services do. Some politicians and partisan commentators have incorrectly suggested that the Alaska National Guard, rather than local law enforcement and the court system, should pursue prosecution of sexual assault. This is not possible, as civilian offenses such as sexual assault may only be prosecuted by civilian criminal justice authorities, per state law.

These uninformed individuals have also asserted that we chose not to be proactive in our response to victim reporting. This is also incorrect, as every unrestricted report has been referred to local law enforcement.

5. The Alaska National Guard pursues administrative action in response to local law enforcement and Office of Complex Investigation results. Some members who have committed acts of sexual assault or sexual harassment have lost rank, been forced out of the organization, lost command, or been administratively reassigned pending the outcome of administrative boards.

In order to ensure due process for the subject and the alleged victim, these actions take time. Due to required confidentiality and respect for privacy, personnel who are not directly involved in the administrative actions are not privy to the status or details of pending actions. This may be the reason for some people's concerns about timeliness or level of response; they are unaware of the status for each case, and therefore make incorrect assumptions that cases are not pursued.

6. There are three sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates throughout the Alaska National Guard. We have individual and class training, sensing sessions (feedback discussions), "all-calls" for leadership to communicate directly with all personnel, in addition to a video message from leadership, announcements, advertisements, articles, posters, brochures, presentation tables, and social media posts. All of this to ensure in every way possihle that we have resources in place to help victims.

Communications are consistent and often so the message will be clearly understood that sexual assault is not tolerated. We do many things to ensure our members know our stance on sexual assault, including encouraging them to come forward for support in the event that they have been assaulted.

7. Of the nine assaults that allegedly occurred since 2009 by a member of the Alaska National Guard,

A. Five were off-base, off-duty.
B. Four were rapes.
C. Five were inappropriate touching with clothes on.
D. Seven were referred to law enforcement (the other two were restricted reports—a decision made by the victim—which therefore could not be prosecuted or otherwise further pursued while in such status.)
E. None have been prosecuted.

8. Administrative investigations in the National Guard are now conducted by the Office of Complex Investigations but this program has only been funded since 2012. Prior to this, local units did not have the resources or guidance to fully and properly respond to reports of sexual assaults and were limited to "15-6" Investigations (in the Army National Guard) or "Commander Directed Investigations" (in the Air National Guard).

One assault is too many. But in an organization that draws members from a community of citizens who live in the state with the highest rate of sexual assaults in the nation, 1/20th of one percent is not the epidemic proportion being portrayed by some journalists and politicians.

We are very proud of the many distinguished Soldiers and Airmen in the Alaska National Guard who proudly serve our state and nation. We will continue to educate them, protect them and pursue justice within the means we have.

We hope that others who care about the people in our organization will focus on the real needs and concerns we must address, and hold their fire, even though they are being misinformed by cynical political agendas.

Governor Sean Parnell has been responding to allegations that sexual assault crimes within the state's National Guard were reported to him four years before he requested a federal investigation. The Governor says as soon as he had specific information, he acted. Parnell's commissioner of the Department of Military and Veteran's Affairs, Major General Thomas Katkus says the federal investigation should help improve the system.

Major General Thomas Katkus

Major General Thomas Katkus, how large do you think the sexual assault issue is within Alaska?

The numbers I've got show us below what it would be in Alaska, we have a different number, total number of cases, because we track victims, don't track it as if we've got that many suspects. We've got 37 cases; of those 37 cases we have only 11 reported sexual assaults are Guard members as perpetrators. My position is even one is too many and it's a problem – a large problem; 37 cases over the past 5 years.

How does Alaska compare to military nationally for sexual assault?

With Alaska being the highest sexual assault in the nation, dark climate, small houses, alcohol, there is a lot of propensity toward that kind of activity, which is unfortunate but also very rampant in cold, dark climates. I think the problem is getting better results with the resources being put toward it. The Guard is community based so we have a lot of resources beyond DOD. We have a lot of members in the National Guard that are counselors or lawyers so we have resources. The issue is out there fairly evenly across all services but we're better equipped to offer services.

Does the legal structure of the Guard make it more cumbersome, more difficult to track cases and get information, Anchorage Police Department handling cases? Helpful or more difficult?

Difficult to address. We as a National Guard, we don't have an independent criminal justice system. We're not like active duty that has its own Uniform Code of Military Justice to address specifically infractions within the National Guard, because we have members that are also traditional, that go home at night and are under the laws of their communities. The authorities that cover our members are really the local authorities, the state troopers or other law enforcement. It's not our purview to supplement that. We take our own disciplinary actions through normal business practices, rules and regulation enforcement and then we have discipline. But we don't incarcerate individuals. We don't have a requirement; that our preponderance of evidence is what we go off of, 50% is civil action as opposed to beyond a reasonable doubt in any type of criminal investigation.

Governor Parnell said he acted to call for a national investigation as soon as he had specifics. What kind of specific information is needed to prompt an investigation?

For the National Guard Bureau that the Governor asked, it's just the request of the Governor. The Governor, anytime he has a desire to have an independent assessment or look into an organization he's responsible with, which would be the Air Guard or the Army Guard, he can contact the National Guard Bureau, advise them of the problem and they would propose the best solutions to step forward to look into it. Because it could be a safety issue, it could be an area of concern on finance, so either the safety investigators would come out or an auditor. Or in this case to look at a problem with how the reporting system is or an assessment of how overall, we are addressing sexual assaults or sexual harassment in the National Guard. So, in this case, again, he puts the problem statement forward and they provide the resource that best answers that.

Why wouldn't chaplains risking their positions to bring the concerns forward to the Governor be enough to prompt an investigation by the DOD?

I don't know that I have an answer for that. The Chaplains shouldn't be at risk for bringing any of these issues forward. There's no risk to them to, matter of fact it's incumbent on them to bring those issues forward. Their job description is pretty much, they advise the command....trying to make sure I get this right so that this is fairly accurate. The significant responsibility that they're held to is to advise the commander of issues of ethics, morals and morale within an organization. So they're almost held on a no harm, no foul. They're required to bring the bad news forward if they've got the bad news.

Well it seems there was some confusion or hesitancy in that regard. Your deputy commissioner asked the chaplains to sign a document saying they wouldn't speak on behalf of the Guard, when actually what they were doing was bringing victims concerns forward. Did you ask him to do those things or was that something he felt he needed to do as deputy commissioner?

I believe the letter you're referring to is a letter that went out to all of our members as we approached the political season. It was advising everyone to be very judicious and cautious on how they answer anyone that is approaching them and asking them for an official position of the department. So in that sense that was just to reiterate to clear it with a supervisor and we're not prohibiting anybody from talking to the press, their chain of command or other people. Just that they try to clear that, get the best information possible and if they're speaking for the department, make sure they clear it through our public affairs office in order to make sure we have the best, most accurate information out there.

Do you think there needs to be changes in reporting and how people can bring these concerns forward to help boost confidence for people who are taking on the very difficult thing to have to come forward and talk about trauma and painful episodes they may have experienced?

Absolutely, especially with as many deployments as we have because it's not only in the area of sexual assault, it's any type of experience that they are not normally exposed to in civilian activity. So there are traumatic events in everyone's life. We follow DOD policy and its changing constantly. I think in the last five years the department of defense has definitely stepped up its game. It's provided additional resources and of the limited training dollars, a significant amount of that resource is directed to bystander training, self help awareness to educate people about reporting any type of sexual assault or activity related to it. Then the resourcing for the investigation of those has increased and we've worked on training our investigators to investigate the civilian equivalent complaints of sexual harassment. WE have additional resources that would look into any allegations of sexual assault, after the law enforcement have also been engaged on that same topic. And then the victim advocacy program we have. Multiple victim advocates have been assigned to the Guard as of late. Currently have three sexual assault coordinators assigned and 42 victim advocates assigned to the National Guard. So your question was, do I see better ways to do it? We can always improve but it is an incredible change over the past five years to where we are now.

Major General, how damaging is this for morale?

You know, it's damaging for morale, but where I'm very, very concerned, is we've made great strides in making people aware, we have a process in place, it's very transparent and they can feel comfortable reporting and they're going to get the help. With all of the adverse press and the senior officials who have basically expressed their concern and trust, I would hope that would not translate to the other end of the food chain to the young members who may be victimized and may now decide not to come forward because of lack of trust in the system. The DOD has spent five years trying to put in place a system that works and I'm very afraid that this might be undermined by the lack of confidence that may be generated by this perception that is out there.

Are you confident that when this investigation is over, that the system will show there are no major problems with how the guard is handling reporting and the cases that come forward?

I'm confident that the assessment will come in with a better way of doing it. This is the first time we've really stepped back and evaluated from top to bottom, the entire process. I would hope they would come in and advise us of better ways to do business. So we look forward to what we will get as feedback. My feeling is we have a good system in place right now, it's a workable system that follows all of DOD's processes and regulations and I'm thinking an outside look will provide that much more suggestions that we can incorporate and make this better.

My last question would be, you just mentioned Guard members and a perception of what's happening. What would be your concern about perception? We know there are high rates of assault, what perception are you concerned about?

Well, the perception I'm concerned about is that, in the past five years, 70% of reported assaults, the perpetrator was a member of our community, not the National Guard. So 11 assaults in five years, those members were Guard members who committed those acts, so out of 37 cases, only 11 have we had to discipline one of our own members over. The rest, the other 26 cases, are all cases were we have provided exceptional support for the victim. Those victim advocates have engaged. We've taken the victims to local law enforcement, supported them through all of the issues and tried to make sure we could be there for them. That's what's not getting reported here is DOD as an organization has provided incredible response in taking care of the soldiers and airmen that are assigned in the National Guard and that's where I'm really afraid the perception is being missed here.

Is the Guard looking at, the people who have been victimized. Are there efforts underway to track back and look at where are people getting into positions where they're at risk. Is there research into that so you can help young men and young women avoid some of those pitfalls?

There's always different types of training we have people exposed to and mandate and some of the best is bystander training where not only do you train people to look out for themselves and not put themselves into harm's way but also train soldiers to look out for other people that may be inadvertently putting themselves in harm's way. So they teach them how to carefully approach a situation and defuse it. Sometimes a third party, that extra set of eyes that the potential victim may not be able to see. So your answer is yes, we're training people to be safer and we're training them to look out for each other and realistically that's how you start solving all of these problems is everyone becomes aware of looking out for each other.

Major General Thomas Katkus Responds To National Guard Sexual Assault Allegations

Parnell defends timing of National Guard inquiry

Posted: April 30, 2014 - 12:07am

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE — Gov. Sean Parnell's call for a federal investigation of sexual misconduct within the Alaska National Guard came nearly four years after allegations first arose, but he said Monday that he could not act before getting specific details of allegations.

Parnell on Sunday was criticized in a newspaper column for the timing of his call for an investigation and responded to reporters' questions following a candidate debate in Anchorage, the Anchorage Daily News reported.

Early in his tenure, Parnell said halting assaults on women would be a focus of his administration.

Parnell said he met with National Guard chaplains in 2010 regarding the lack of the service's response to reports of sexual assault. However, he did not learn specifics until this year, he said.

"When the chaplains came to me in 2010, I listened to them, had a lengthy meeting with them, heard their concerns specifically on sexual assault, sexual misconduct, those charges that they were saying was occurring in the Guard," Parnell said. "They could only give me general allegations."

The chaplains were "under a duty of confidentiality," Parnell said.

Parnell spoke to the National Guard commander, Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, and learned some of the cases were years old and that allegations of criminal acts had been referred to police or Alaska State Troopers.

Parnell worked with Katkus to make sure a safe reporting mechanism was in place for sexual assault complaints, he said.

Parnell said he met with state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, on Feb. 26, and was given the name of a person in the National Guard who could give specific details on how the system was not working for victims. Parnell said he called the guard member within 24 hours and was told of two instances where the system had not worked.

"Within 24 hours of learning those specific details, I was writing a letter to the Guard Bureau, contacting them, saying please send a special investigator to review all of the cases that the guard has whether they are related to sexual misconduct, whether they are related to fraud," Parnell said. "Got right on it as soon as I had those specific details."

The letter asked for a federal investigation of sexual assault and fraud in the Alaska National Guard and an examination of how commanders handled reports of rape. Parnell announced the federal review in March.

The bureau's Office of Complex Investigations could complete a report by with recommendations by late summer or early fall, Parnell said.

"You can be sure if anything untoward is there or anything that raises concern relative to sexual assault victims or reporting or the command structure, that I will take action," Parnell said.

Gov. Parnell Says He Took Immediate Action On Sexual Assault Allegations

Governor Sean Parnell is defending his decision to wait four years to request a federal investigation into reports of a sexual assault problem in the Alaska National Guard. Anchorage Daily News columnist Shannyn Moore wrote Sunday that Parnell first learned about misconduct in the Guard in 2010, when he was approached by three guard chaplains. Parnell says he took those charges seriously, but lacked the details to prompt an investigation until February.

He says after the initial concerns were raised, he went to Major General Thomas Katkus to make sure the systems were in place to protect guard members. Then in February, Parnell says he was able to talk with a guard member who provided specifics.

Based on what you've heard from victims and others, how big of a problem do you tbink sexual assault is in the National Guard?

I think one allegation is too much and I take every allegation seriously, because I am concerned about Alaskans who suffer from sexual assault and violence. It's been a core part of who I am fighting for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. So, I take every assault allegation seriously. So, in 2010 when the chaplains first came to speak with me and they made allegations that sexual assault was occurring on Guard members I questioned them and asked for detail, and they could not provide it because they were under duty of confidentiality to the people they counseled, but immediately after that I took action and went right to the Guard, to the general, and asked him to talk to me about what he knew of sexual assaults occurring in the Guard. And he went through the cases that had been filed at that time; spoke about how any cases that involved allegations of criminal activity, as in sexual assault, are not only investigated but they are also referred to local law enforcement – like the Anchorage Police Department. And I made sure that for the safety of the victims and any future victims in the Guard that there was, and is, a reporting process that's safe for anybody in the Guard to utilize; that there's an investigation process that is complete and accurate and directed that appropriate penalties be assessed. Now, that's outside the criminal context, but the criminal context goes directly to law enforcement. I had only those general allegations of sexual assault, but I still took action to make sure that there was a system in place that works for victims of sexual assault.

Those general allegations persisted but they were the same allegations about events that occurred years ago. And then on Feb. 26th, Senator Dyson, came to me and said he had specific detail. Before when he spoke to me he had general allegations and he asked me to call a guard member who would provide me with specific detail about how the system wasn't working. I made that contact within 24 hours of Sen. Dyson's [call], personally spoke with a Guard member. That Guard member provided me with two instances where, if the allegations were substantiated, that the system would have failed our Guard member. And at that point, I realized I needed to get an independent assessment of the entire reporting and investigation structure. So I called in the National Guard Bureau, they have a complex investigation review team – I did that within 24 hours and that team is on the ground now in Alaska, doing their work to make sure that victims are safe.

Some people will think why was it four years? In hindsight do you wish you would have come forward four years ago, what do you think could have been done differently?

At the time I took immediate action to make sure that every victim of a sexual assault had been referred to law enforcement. I made sure that anyone who had concerns about what was happening in the Guard had a safe reporting structure, but without specific detail about how the system was otherwise failing, that's all I could do, is what I believed. And still believe that. But, on the other hand, once I got specific information about how the structure was actually failing, in other words the who, what, where, when why – the same thing you reporters ask – even though I pressed for that earlier and nobody could or would provide me with that, the second I got that kind of information I took immediate action with the National Guard Bureau to get them in there and get an independent look at what was happening.

Talk more about the specifics? What exactly were you needing for you to have that ability to actually ask for an investigation?

So, 4 years ago I was told there is a problem with sexual assault in the Guard. That is the sum and substance of what I was given. When I went to Guard leadership to inquire about that they said that yes they had specific instances where sexual assaults had been reported, that those had been referred to law enforcement for investigation, like the Anchorage Police Department. And they also detailed the reporting structure for any kind of alleged malfeasance in the Guard that was in place. And I had detailed for me, here's the list of cases that are pending; here's the list of cases that have been resolved in the past. But when it came specifically to the sexual assaults, when that kind of criminal activity was brought forward, that went immediately, as I was told, to law enforcement, which I think is appropriate.

One of the problems with sexual assault cases is there often isn't enough information and it's very difficult for victims to come forward. Did you consider that when you decided not to pursue an investigation earlier? What would you say to a victim of sexual assault about the statement that you didn't have enough specifics? Do you think that's enough of an answer for someone?

What I did is an internal state investigation. Meaning, I went in, my office went in and we made leadership tell us exactly what they were doing to protect sexual assault victims.

When I had an actual specific set of facts related to how the system had failed, or – in this case – was alleged to fail, I asked the National Guard Bureau, as an independent assessing body, to come in and look at what I had been told and also look at the entire system to make sure we protect our guard members.

The Choose Respect campaign has been a big focus for you. Are you concerned this will damage the momentum or image you're hoping to get across to Alaskans about coming forward when these things happen?

Well, absolutely. Anyone who knows me would say I care deeply about victims of sexual assault and domestic violence. And I'm more concerned than anything that victims may not come forward. Because I know from speaking with many across the state how difficult that already is, and I don't want to make that more difficult. That's why I launched the immediate investigation, even when I had the barest of details, and now that I have specific details, I've called in the National Guard Bureau to help because I think it's beyond us at this point.

When do you expect the investigation to conclude, when will you have a report and will you commit to releasing that report publicly?

I already have. I have made that commitment. The review team from the National Guard Bureau let me know they would be on the ground, in Alaska in the month of May. They said that it would take several months after that to complete the report and make that available to me. I already committed to making that report public, with the exception of any confidential victim information that should not be put forward, because I do want to protect the privacy of the victims. So, that's been my commitment and remains so.

You're still standing behind General Katkus. Do you have confidence in him? Do you wish he would have come to you sooner?

General Katkus has been very forthright. When I started asking questions about sexual assault cases, he came forward right away, showed me the cases that had been transferred to law enforcement, showed me how they have tracked cases, detailed how they investigate cases. And he's been very proactive about holding what the Guard calls "sensing sessions," meaning going into guard units and informing people about how to report acts of sexual harassment, acts of sexual violence. So General Katkus has been very proactive in that regard, and that's what I know at this point.

Do you think he could have done more within the Guard itself to make sure this behavior was not at all tolerated?

From what I know now, the answer is no. But again, I've asked the National Guard Bureau to come have that independent look to make sure our Guard members are safe. General Katkus has told me at every turn that's his desire and mission, he understands it, gets it and he has the systems in place that demonstrate that. I have asked the National Guard Bureau to make sure that those systems truly work for victims because we care deeply, and I care deeply, about protecting Alaskans.

Did you talk to anyone beyond General Katkus about the chaplains' concerns?

Yes, in fact, our office talked with numerous Guard members. All of which had the same general allegations. There was one victim who came forward and spoke with a member of my office. Her case was also being investigated by Anchorage Policed Department at that point in time, so the answer is yes, we spoke with a number of people.

Mike Nizich-yYour chief of staff- was using his personal e-mail account to correspond about this issuc. Wby was that?

I spoke with Mr. Nizich and understand that was at the request of the chaplains who wanted to go outside the official channels. However, I've asked Mr. Nizich to check his personal e-mail for that and his recollection is that it's one email. I've asked him to check for that and move it to the state account, which is protocol to follow. And that will be a part of the public record at that point.

McHugh Pierre was asking questions. Who asked him to bave the chaplains sign confidcntiality statements?

I don't know that but I do have a copy of what he apparently asked to be signed. It's a statement that was emailed to all Department of Military and Veterans Affairs employees. It says employees aren't authorized to give statements on behalf of department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, which is standard operating policy in any department or any business that you don't speak for the business, you don't speak for the department. without first coordinating it with your supervisor.

He also spoke with people on base about wanting to know how information was getting out. It almost feels a bit like a witch hunt. Does that concern you that oftentimes it takes people acting outside of the normal channels to get this information out and at the end of the day, that's the main mission, is it not?

Well that's true and that's why I asked these questions. Again, there's nothing that stops the employee, as long as they're not speaking on behalf of the department. In other words they're speaking as a person, as an Alaskan who's concerned, that's not what this statement addresses though.

But the chaplains weren't' saying they were speaking for the department, they were raising concerns about people who were alleging sexual assault.

And I don't condone the activity you just described. I do, on the other hand, understand when supervisors are asking their employees not to represent the department in certain things. In this case, I don't have all the facts, but I don't condone trying to stop what you're describing.

So you're saying you wouldn't condone McHugh Pierre asking them to he quiet?

No. But again, I don't have evidence is that's what he did. What I evidence is that he asked them not to speak on behalf of the department without coordinating that with a supervisor.

What have you taken away from this process? Do you think there are changes that need to be made? Are you frustrated by tbe process are tbere things that need to be done differently?

I am frustrated when Alaskans in the Guard don't feel like they are protected; that's entirely frustrating. And it's frustrating to me when I don't have enough information to take action beyond what I did. In other words, I took action, I made sure that the systems were in place to protect Guard members; and that the people were in place, like an independent investigator – a safe route for people to report, but until the end of February, until then I didn't have verified facts that alerted me I needed to bring the National Guard Bureau in. So, I do get frustrated when Alaskans are reporting harm and are continuing to report harm, even though, from all appearances, the system is in place and the checks and balances are in place to assure their safety -- including referrals to law enforcement agencies. So if indeed we find there is wrongdoing, I 'll take steps to punish that and make it right, there's no question about that.

Sexual Assault Response
Alaska National Guard
Key Messages and Talking Points

Pursuing Justice. We do not have an independent criminal justice system in the National Guard and we are not subject to the provisions of the federal uniformed code of military justice (UCMJ). We report crimes to local civilian law enforcement.

We have opportunities to respond to allegations administratively through personnel actions that may affect the future career of a perpetrator, but there are lengthy processes as we follow regulations for due process. We do all that we can to ensure victims are protected and perpetrators see consequences to their actions.

Victim Reporting. Victims decide if they want to report their assault to a sexual assault response coordinator or a victim advocate. We have 3 sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates in the Alaska National Guard.

Victim Assistance. They provide assistance to victims. In 70% of reported assaults in the last 5 years, the perpetrator was a civilian member of the community, not a National Guard member. We want to help members of our organization who have been harmed, and we offer assistance and resources that a large majority of civilian organizations do not offer to their employees in-house.

Our Rates vs. Alaska's Rates. There have been 11 reported sexual assaults with National Guard members as the perpetrator in the past 5 years. We have 4,000 people in our organization and an average of 2 assaults by National Guard members per year over a five-year timeframe. One assault is one too many. But our organization has a much smaller percentage of reported assaults than the percentages reported by Alaska citizens as a whole, where we are challenged with one of the highest sexual assault rates in the nation.

RECAP: Summary of Numbers for Reported Cases. There have been 37 reported cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009. In 26 of those cases, the alleged perpetrator was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard. We have 11 reports in the past 5 years where the alleged perpetrator was a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Reports.

2014: 1 (Unrestricted, 1 not in the AKNG)

2013: 11 (8 were unrestricted; 5 not in the AKNG)

2012: 3 (2 unrestricted; all 3 not in AKNG)

2011: 12 (10 unrestricted; 11 not in the AKNG)

2010: 6 (5 unrestricted; all 5 not in the AKNG)

2009: 4 (2 unrestricted; 1 not in the AKNG)

All unrestricted cases were referred to law enforcement.

Chaplains assertions. All of the victims who sought support from our chaplains also reported their assaults and have received or declined assistance from our sexual assault response program.

Law enforcement. None of the unrestricted cases that were referred to local law enforcement have been prosecuted to date. You may contact law enforcement directly if you have questions about referred cases.

Parnell responds to his handling of allegations of sexual abuse in the Guard

After a candidate forum on Monday, Gov. Sean Parnell answered questions about his administration's handling of allegations of sexual abuse in Alaska's National Guard, something that appears to have plagued the Guard for years. The problems in the Guard were reported in the media last October, and were revisited in a Sunday column by Shannyn Moore. More is likely to be revealed about the issue. For now, however, below are the allegations that I questioned Parnell about, followed by his response.

- Allegation: Parnell waited for four years to act on allegations of a widespread culture of abuse in the Guard. In 2010, three chaplains had a meeting with Parnell to discuss the culture. Republican Sen. Fred Dyson called on Parnell three times to take action. However, it wasn't until March 2014 that Parnell called on the federal government to conduct an official investigation into the allegations.
- Response: Parnell said that the allegations lacked the specificity that he needed to take action. He said he met with now Adjutant General Thomas Katkus about the issue. He said he reviewed charts and spreadsheets that documented the allegations, and saw that the appropriate ones had been referred to the Anchorage Police Department and the troopers. On February 26, Republican Sen. Fred Dyson brought forth a "specific person who was able to make specific claims about what went wrong," Parnell said. Parnell himself talked to this person, and within 24 hours, called on the feds. That investigation is expected to be complete in May. A report will follow likely sometime late summer.

- Allegation: Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, tried to get a sexual assault investigator to stay quiet and not talk to legislators about the issues in the Guard by having her sign a letter saying she wouldn't do so. He then tried to get the Guard chaplains to sign the same letter.
- Response: Parnell said that he was "surprised' by the accusation. But when he looked into it, it was "less nefarious than what had been reported," he said. Indeed, the letter in question, which you can read here, is one that went to other department employees. It says that employees should not give official statements without prior authorizations, and that although, according to the letter, "the mandate does not mean that an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation," such contact had to take place during personal time using personal resources.

Finally, Moore reported that Mike Nizich, Parnell's chief of staff, was using his personal email to correspond with the chaplains about the issues in the Guard. Personal emails are not subject to public information requests. Parnell said that if those emails were about state business, they should be forwarded to Nizich's state account and will direct him to do so.

On Feb. 28, 2014, our governor, Sean Parnell, wrote a letter asking the Department of Defense to investigate "reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

He explained that he was compelled to request the investigation by "information I recently learned."

That was not true. In fact, it was very far from the truth.

Military officers had risked their careers to tell the governor personally that female soldiers had been sexually assaulted by other Guard members and that those assaults were not only not investigated, they were covered up by senior officers.

And when did the governor really learn about this misconduct?

In 2010, four years before he finally decided somebody needed to do something about the pirate ship that was his National Guard.

Here's some of what happened, taken from the accounts of people directly involved:

In 2010, several of the victims of sexual assault and misconduct were distraught and frustrated by the Guard leadership's unwillingness to investigate their complaints and protect them from retribution by victimizers. Eventually, in desperation, they took their stories to their military chaplains. Three chaplains, convinced that they could not trust senior officers of the Guard to respond appropriately, selflessly decided to take their concerns over the heads of those officers directly to the governor.

The chaplains were able to connect with the governor because, in addition to his military duties, one of them had also worked in administration for the Grace Christian Church school, which Parnell's daughters had attended. Using that connection, he was able to arrange a phone appointment with Parnell.

On Nov. 18, 2010, the chaplains -- a major and two lieutenant colonels -- gathered in a church office for their telephone conference with the governor. The chaplains, all feeling personally uncomfortable and professionally at risk for going outside the chain of command, told Parnell, their commander in chief, what they thought he needed to know about the widespread lack of trust in senior Guard leadership, the mishandling of sexual assault complaints and the misuse of Guard funds and resources. The call lasted 20 minutes.

Parnell thanked them for their courage.

Less than two weeks later, on Nov. 30, 2010, several Air National Guardsmen sent a complaint to the governor asking him to "accept the resignation of Major Gen. Thomas Katkus because of 'multiple acts of moral turpitude' he had allowed to run rampant, including drug trafficking, sexual assaults/rape, illegal use of aircraft."

Katkus, who has since been promoted by Parnell to adjutant general of the Alaska Guard, is a member of the governor's Cabinet.

Col. Robert Doehl, a former vice commander of the Alaska Air National Guard's 176th wing, now works for Sen. Mark Begich, D-Alaska, as a special assistant for military and veterans' affairs.

On Dec. 3, 2010, Doehl wrote a seven-page letter to the governor. He thanked Parnell for a meeting they'd had that same day.

Doehl went on to repeat and document allegations about the Guard that he had shared with Parnell in their meeting. The allegations included abuse of authority, safety shortcuts that had resulted in loss of life and aircraft, cover-ups, cronyism and retaliation against whistleblowers. He named names, specifically accusing Lt. Gen. Craig Campbell (he became lieutenant governor in August 2009) and then-Maj. Gen. Katkus of failing to stop the misconduct.

That meeting also included the chaplains, the major and the lieutenant colonels, along with several other officers. By that time, several female soldier rape victims had submitted written statements to the Governor's Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Katie Tepas, according to one of the chaplains. Your office already has those statements, the officers told Parnell. Tepas had also met with some of the victims, who told her their stories in person, according to two officers who heard it from the victims directly.

Karl Hansen, a former special agent with the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division and a former member of security details for Defense Secretaries Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates, is now the medical ombudsman at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. In that role, he has dealt extensively with the Guard sexual assault victims. Hansen said one of the victims told him that Tepas had asked why she, the victim, didn't like Katkus and what she thought of the governor. The meeting led nowhere. There was no investigation.

During my conversation with him, I asked Hansen what he thought of Parnell's "Choose Respect" campaign against sexual and domestic violence. He said, "The victims I've talked to feel it's just lip service. I'm dealing with women who are suicidal because of what has happened to them -- some attempting multiple times."

On Dec. 29, 2011, the lieutenant colonels spoke by phone with Parnell's chief of staff, Mike Nizich. Nizich had been present for other discussions and was the designated contact person for the chaplains. Nizich said he would convey their concerns to the governor. The chaplains stayed in touch with Nizich -- through Nizich's personal email, not his state email -- over the following months.

By early fall of 2013, state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, had been briefed on the allegations about the Guard. He knew one of the chaplains through their service together on a community board. Dyson said he went to the governor with information about the pervasive climate of "boys will be boys" and the "circling of the wagons" around alleged perpetrators in the Guard.

"It appeared to me that the governor was not giving enough credibility to the information the chaplains were giving him," Dyson told me.

In October 2013, reporter Sean Cockerham wrote a story about the sexual assault allegations for the Daily News. Cockerham reported that Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a member of the Guard and a former Anchorage police officer, had been appointed to investigate the charges of sexual misconduct. (I'm told she was appointed by Brig. Gen. Catherine Jorgensen.)

The chaplains were asking why it had taken so long. It had been three years since they first told the governor what had happened to some women in the Guard.

After the Cockerham story appeared, Dyson went to the governor a second time, encouraging him to take an active role in addressing the chaplains' concerns. "The question of the propriety of the chaplains in speaking to the media came up," Dyson said. He meant the governor didn't like the fact they had talked to a reporter.

On Dec. 6, 2013, Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, summoned Lt. Col. Wawersik, the sexual assault investigator, to his office on JBER. He wanted to know if she had been giving information to Dyson. Wawersik told him she had not.

On Dec. 9, Pierre called two of the chaplains to his office. After asking which lawmakers they had talked to, Pierre asked them to sign a letter stating that they would not talk to legislators. Both declined, saying they would first have to consult an attorney. They were not allowed to take a copy of Pierre's letter with them.

The next day, their attorney, Wayne Anthony Ross of Anchorage, wrote to Pierre asking for a copy of the document. He also asked Pierre to explain the "established guidelines" he had referenced in his discussion with the two chaplains.

As of Friday, almost five months after he wrote Pierre, Ross had not received a reply, he told me.

In February 2014, Dyson contacted the governor a third time and again strongly encouraged him to act. Two weeks later the governor requested a federal investigation.

When I asked Dyson why he thought it had taken so long for the governor to do something, he said, "He was too loyal to his people" and he "lacked a healthy skepticism."

I think that's a charitable analysis. I'll just say it doesn't suggest the governor had an excess of concern for sexual assault victims, or the need for a functional National Guard.

Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, has been asking some of the same questions I have about these events. This past Friday, when I emailed the governor's office asking to talk to Parnell about the Guard, his spokeswoman sent me a copy of a letter the governor had just sent to French.

In the letter, Parnell suggested it wasn't possible for him to have followed up on the chaplains' sexual assault information. He posed this question to French:

"Did the chaplains also tell you they were unable to state case-specific detail with our office to substantiate their concerns because of their duty of confidentiality to the individuals they counseled?"

The governor conveniently overlooks the fact that the sexual assaults had been reported earlier within the chain of command. Presumably all Parnell would have had to do was ask the nearest general to get him the names and allegations of all the Guard soldiers who had reported being raped in the last few years. And if that didn't work, his office already had the victims' statements, and someone there had talked to victims.

Parnell's letter continued: "Even without detail specific enough to pinpoint a victim willing to report, nor a perpetrator, we made sure through the Adjutant General that Guard members had a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations would be taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including any appropriate penalties. Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referral to the appropriate law enforcement agency."

And who was the Adjutant General who would ensure the safety and proper treatment of victims and the prosecution of perpetrators?

Both of Alaska's U.S. senators, Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski, responded relatively quickly to the public allegations. Sean Parnell, the commander in chief of the Alaska Guard, waited nearly four years.

In the meantime, the victims suffered and the pirate ship sailed on.

Question: How many reports of sexual misconduct per year has the AK Guard seen as a whole each of last five years?

Our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Octavia Thompson, only tracks sexual assaults that are reported to her. There are several facets of sexual misconduct that don't rise to the level of sexual assault, things such as fraternization or sexual harassment, of which she does not track.

In addition, a victim may choose to file an unrestricted report or restricted report. If a victim chooses unrestricted reporting, it gives victim advocates permission to notify the victim's command and local law enforcement. Unrestricted reporting also gives us the opportunity to ensure offenders are disciplined to the full extent of our means.

Also, keep in mind that a victim can report a sexual assault to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, but his/her perpetrator does not have to be a member of the Alaska National Guard. We will still provide the victims with resources and assistance.

For unrestricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Unrestricted Reporting Cases
2014: 1 (This case has an alleged perpetrator who is NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2013: 8 (3 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 10 (All 10 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2

All of these cases were referred to local law enforcement.

Please note the broad military definition referenced below on sexual assault. The 2005 Defense Task Force on Sexual Harassment and Violence at the Military Service Academies report states:

> "Within the military community, the term sexual assault carries a more far-reaching meaning that encompasses everything from violent sexual acts such as rape, forcible sodomy, and assault with intent to commit rape or sodomy, to indecent assault. While indecent assault connotes violence, violence is not a prerequisite of the crime. Indecent assault can be a mere sexual touching that occurs without the consent of the person who is touched.

If a victim chooses to file a restricted report, we can only share information to the extent in which the victim gives permission. There could be instances in which a victim reports a sexual assault to a victim advocate, chaplain, medical personnel or the VA and chooses not to meet with the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Also, when a victim chooses to file a restricted report, their information is not shared with law enforcement or Guard leadership and is kept confidential. Law enforcement is only contacted when a victim files an unrestricted report.

For restricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Restricted Reporting Cases
2014: 0
2013: 3 (2 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 5 (All 5 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)

In summary, 37 cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009 reported to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator:

2014: 1
2013: 11
2012: 3
2011: 12
2009: 4

Of those 37 cases, when the alleged sexual assault occurred, 26 cases involved an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed an unrestricted report in 24 cases.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed a restricted report in 13 cases.

Gov. Parnell Asking For Investigation National Guard Sexual Assaults

Governor Parnell is asking the federal National Guard Bureau to investigate cases of sexual assault in Alaska's National Guard. In a press release, Parnell wrote he is "deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

The investigation follows a story from the Anchorage Daily News last October where alleged victims of sexual assault described an extensive problem in Alaska's National Guard.

Sean Cockerham is a reporter with McClatchy Newspapers Washington Bureau. He broke that story and is reporting on the investigation. He says he began hearing about problems in the Guard last year.

KTUU says Parnell's office this week released a Feb. 28 letter to National Guard Bureau chief Gen. Frank Grass that asks for an investigator to be appointed to examine open and closed investigations of alleged sexual assault.

Parnell spokeswoman, Sharon Leighow, says Grass quickly responded, and Parnell met last week with officials, including Col. Christian Rofrano, the chief counsel of the National Guard Bureau. Leighow says the scope of an investigation was discussed.

Alaska National Guard officials have said 29 cases of sexual assault have been reported since 2009. Of those, 21 were closed or suspended after law enforcement got involved.

Subject: more questions

Good morning, Sean,

Your questions and my answers are below. Please let me know if you need anything else.

Sincerely,

Candis

QUESTION:
I understand some things are not releasable, but I'd like to request at least a synopsis of what each of these soldiers is specifically alleged to have done. Also, are you saying the names of the soldiers involved will never be released? I'd like to renew my request for the names, or at least the ranks.

ANSWER:
Because these are personnel/administrative investigations (not criminal investigations), we are limited by regulation about what we can release. If we were to release some of what you are asking for, it could invalidate separation board proceedings and negatively impact our ability to pursue justice.

Allegations include a range of misconduct, from fraternization to misuse of government equipment.

Not every investigation was in response to victims coming forward and seeking assistance. In some cases, supervisors or commanders were notified of possible behaviors, and the commander pursued an inquiry (internal administrative investigation). In other cases, victims initiated a restricted report, which does not give permission for the organization to refer the case to law enforcement. And in some cases, the victim initiated an unrestricted report.

If law enforcement is unable to pursue the case due to lack of evidence, lack of cooperation by the victim, or a variety of other reasons, the adjutant general may request that the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (NGB/OCI) pursue an investigation. A secondary option is the administrative internal investigation to root out more details of the alleged activity.

QUESTION:
Will the charges for these soldiers be referred to law enforcement for possible criminal prosecution?

ANSWER:
It is always our practice to turn over all allegations of a criminal nature to local law enforcement.

Four of the cases were already referred to local law enforcement, and local law enforcement did not pursue the cases.

One of those four cases was referred to NGB/OCI, was investigated, and is still in process.

The other eight of the 12 investigations were initiated in order to look into allegations that did not indicate or claim actual criminal behavior—although such investigations may discover possible criminal behavior—or the victim chose not to report or pursue assistance from local law enforcement or cooperate with law enforcement.

To all DMVA employees:

We are about to turn the clock on a new year and 2014 will certainly be exciting!

There are many candidates for political office and many of them keep the Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs as a high priority. This can affect our department in many ways, one of which can lead to candidates contacting employees to get an official statement outside of the chain of command.

Employees are not authorized to give statements on behalf of the department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, and the Commissioner/ Adjutant General's office.

Our goal is to maintain the utmost professionalism in the workplace and the community, and this is one step to ensure we will be successful.

This mandate does not mean an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation. But the employee must make this contact during non-business hours with personal resources.

I look forward to a successful 2014 and I wish everyone a Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays!

Alaska National Guard unit being investigated for allegations of sexual misconduct

By Sean Cockerham
McClatchy Washington Bureau
Published: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 3:00 am
Last Modified: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 7:29 pm

WASHINGTON -- Current and former members of the Alaska National Guard say there's serious sexual misconduct within the ranks and an investigation of recruiters accused of rape is now underway.

Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a former Anchorage police officer, is investigating allegations of sexual assault as well as other offenses, such as inappropriate relationships with new recruits, by members of the Alaska Army Guard's recruiting and retention unit headquartered at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. Members of the guard said other soldiers are also under investigation.

Sgt. Rosa Ralls, a currently serving member of the Alaska National Guard who reported being raped in 2009 by a former member of the military, said the sexual assault problem is severe.

"It's horrible, it really is," she said.

Lt. Col. Rick Koch, the state command chaplain for the Alaska National Guard, and Lt. Col. Ted McGovern, a chaplain in the Alaska Army National Guard, questioned why it's taken so long for action.

The two chaplains said sexual assault victims have been coming to them for years, and that the majority were assaulted by fellow guard members. The chaplains said victims don't trust their commanders to help because of a history of mishandled complaints, in which victims felt that nothing was being done.

"There were lots of bread crumbs on the trail that were never taken seriously. It was almost shocking to think that somebody wouldn't try to bore down deeper than they did," Koch said.

Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general, confirmed "we do have some investigations going on." He said he could not discuss the details.

Katkus said the guard investigates all allegations of sexual misconduct.

"The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability," the general said in a written response to questions.

The military is grappling with a nationwide sexual assault crisis. The Pentagon reported a 35 percent increase over two years in the estimated number of military personnel victimized by sexual assault and related crimes. Sexual misconduct is already an issue in Alaska, where the commander of the Army National Guard's 49th Missile Defense battalion at Fort Greely was suspended this summer following complaints that he condoned affairs.

The Alaska National Guard is part of the state's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs. There are 1,905 members of the Army guard and another 2,029 serving in the air guard

Katkus said the federal National Guard Bureau has helped every state as the Department of Defense gained an understanding of the magnitude of the problem across the country.

The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator, he said, while it used to have to rely on its senior officers to investigate.

Chaplains Koch and McGovern said the administration of Alaska Gov. Sean Parnell, who oversees the Alaska National Guard, was told of sexual assault problems as far back as fall 2010.

The chaplains also said sexual harassment is pervasive in the Alaska guard and that the culture needs to change. "I would imagine every female in our organization has at least been harassed," Koch said.

The chaplains said some of the victims came to them through Lt. Col. Ken Blalock. Blalock said the first sexual assault victim, a subordinate, came to him around four years ago for help.

He said others soon followed after word got around that he would help them.

"I've had 15 sexual assault victims come to me," said Blalock, who is no longer in the National Guard.

Blalock said he brought sexual assault victims to the Anchorage police and the governor's office but nothing came of it except he got in trouble with his chain of command.

"I reported to police and the next thing I know I was getting my butt chewed by Gen. Katkus for daring to go outside of the chain of command with this stuff," Blalock said. "If a guardsman goes and robs a bank you call the police, you don't call the general."

Katkus said multiple agencies have looked into allegations by Blalock and "so far they haven't been able to substantiate too much."

In his written response to questions, Katkus said National Guard investigators pass information to law enforcement immediately when they became aware of possible criminal activity.

Katkus, a member of the governor's Cabinet as commissioner of Alaska's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs, was an officer in the Anchorage Police Department for more than 20 years.

He said that as a police officer he was learned firsthand to the impact that sexual assault has on victims and the community, and that he is committed to protecting members of the guard.

"It is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors," he said.

Lt. Col. Wawersik's investigation began in December and focuses on multiple members of the guard's recruiting unit. Wawersik declined to comment when reached by McClatchy.

Court filings show that this summer Wawersik sought and obtained a 20-day protective order against one of the soldiers, Master Sgt. John Nieves, who was a recruiting commander before being reassigned.

Wawersik wrote in the court filings that she was afraid Nieves would hurt or kill her.

"Nieves is a subject of a military investigation I am conducting regarding recruiter misconduct with recruits. . . . As a result of my investigation Nieves stands to lose his 20 year career and be publicly humiliated," she wrote.

Nieves told his counselor at Fort Richardson that "he has a specific plan in mind to harm me," Wawersik wrote in her petition for the protective order. The counselor took the threat seriously and contacted Wawersik to warn her, the petition said.

Wawersik also wrote that the Anchorage Police Department was conducting an undercover investigation "regarding Nieves offering an individual money to harm a witness in my investigation."

Police consider Nieves dangerous and advised her to get the protective order, Wawersik wrote. She added that, even as a former 10-year police officer, she had "never felt more in fear for her life."

Nieves has not been charged with any crime. He said at a July court hearing that the alleged threat against Wawersik was an overreaction. "It was a counselor, somebody I confide in with my issues, it just happened to be that day I was upset. . . . No woman should be under any threat. Period. I am sorry," Nieves said, according to an audio recording of the court hearing.

The judge declined to issue a long-term protective order.

Nieves, reached for comment last week, said he's never committed sexual assault and did not seek to harm any witness.

He said he is awaiting the conclusion of the National Guard's investigation.

"I haven't been charged with anything, just told that I'm being investigated for basically sexual misconduct. And that's it, that's all I know," he said.

Nieves said he couldn't discuss details while the investigation is ongoing.

"I wish I could, honestly, I do want to talk about it. . . . I haven't had any chance to clear my name at all."

The guard's problems have attracted the attention of Alaska's congressional delegation. Sen. Mark Begich said he started hearing last year from constituents about misconduct in the organization.

"We were getting such a frequency from a variety of sources that it told us there is something going on there," Begich said.

Begich said his inquiries led to a National Guard Bureau review of the Alaska Guard. While it didn't tackle the scope of the sexual assault issue, Begich said he thinks it triggered a broader review.

Sexual assault numbers are problematic, as it's a crime that's often unreported. Gen. Katkus said there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported since 2009 to the Alaska Army and Air National Guard's sexual assault response coordinator.

The alleged perpetrators were members of the military in 11 of the cases and civilians in the rest of them, according to Katkus.

In some cases the victim did not want the attack known. But most of the reports were referred for investigation to local law enforcement, he said, such as Anchorage police or state troopers.

Katkus said he is not aware of any prosecutions resulting from the cases.

Anchorage police offered little explanation in response to a series of questions from McClatchy, other than to say that its special victims unit works closely with the National Guard.

"The Anchorage Police Department has made targeting the problem of sexual assault in our community a priority, and each report of sexual assault submitted to APD is reviewed and investigated based on its individual circumstances and merit, regardless of suspect or victim affiliations," said spokeswoman Dani Myren.

National Guard Sgt. Ralls said she told the Anchorage police and National Guard about her rape in 2009, but never found justice.

"I have no trust for either organization," Ralls said.

Ralls obtained her police report and provided a copy to McClatchy. It shows the Anchorage Police Department investigated the alleged rape. But the last entry, which was from 2011, said the case was suspended awaiting analysis of a DNA sample from her alleged attacker. Anchorage police did not respond to an inquiry about the status of her case.

Ralls said she believes her attacker slipped something in her drink. Melissa Jones, who said she was raped while in the Alaska National Guard in 2007, also said she thinks she was drugged.

Jones said she told her guard supervisors about the rape and was then confronted by her fellow soldiers with rumors, including that she'd been gang raped by the entire F Company.

Jones, who does not know who raped her, said the guard gave her no help.

Jones said she left Alaska but was traumatized by what happened, started cutting herself, and at one point attempted suicide.

"I am extremely angry," she said.

Sean,

Thank you for the opportunity to give input prior to the publishing of your story on my department. I would like to state my position right up front so you get an accurate understanding on my attitude towards this issue. As Commissioner for the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs and Adjutant General for the Alaska National Guard, it is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors. Unequivocally, these actions simply have no place in any American work environment.

As both a state and federal entity, we treat such complaints with the utmost sensitivity and follow the clearly established checklist procedure in initiating the appropriate action. As DoD gained an understanding of the magnitude and impact of this problem, we have been extremely fortunate that the National Guard Bureau has provided important resourcing to every state, territory, and District of Columbia. The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator on staff. Prior to this vital resource as a part of our inventory, we relied on our senior Officers to conduct military investigations. If any of these investigations developed the elements of a crime, the case was immediately passed to local law enforcement and/or the Army's Criminal Investigative Division (CID).

Since 2009 there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported from the Air and Army National Guard to our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Our leadership and investigating officers are trained to coordinate with CID and local law enforcement immediately when they become aware that a crime may have been committed. Out of the above mentioned 29 cases, the victim chose to restrict reporting in 11 of those cases. Of the 29 cases, 18 had civilian perpetrators and 11 were military. Local law enforcement, such as Anchorage Police Department or the Alaska State Troopers were contacted in approximately 21 cases, and for specific reasons, APD/AST did not open an investigation.

During the course of military investigations, if our investigators become aware of possible criminal behavior, immediate contact and consultation begins with local law enforcement and/or CID. Those that do not rise to the level of criminal activity are addressed by command in accordance with established military policies and regulations.

I cannot confirm or deny the names of any individuals under investigation, according to Department of Defense personnel policy. Any person under investigation has the right to privacy and the right to due process. I cannot comment on the status of any ongoing investigation. However, in the interest of good order and discipline, we take appropriate action to investigate any and all allegations while ensuring the safety and security of possible victims while simultaneously protecting the rights of anyone suspected of inappropriate behavior.

The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability. Sexual assault and harassment is inconsistent with our values and it erodes trust and confidence. When an allegation is substantiated, we deal with it within the full measure of applicable policy, regulation, and law.

As you may know, I have been a Traditional Alaskan National Guardsman for over 37 years. I spent 21.5 years serving as a full time police officer with the Municipality of Anchorage in a wide range of assignments and eventually retired in 2000 as the Captain of the Resource Division. During my very active career with the Anchorage Police Department, I was exposed first-hand to the effect that sexual assault has on a person and our community. I spent my entire first full-time career under sworn oath as a Police Officer to keep Anchorage safe. Now, still under sworn oath as a federally recognized officer in the US military, I continue work to ensure every one of our Alaska National Guardsmen and our state work force have a secure work environment free from any harassment or abuse.

Is that correct?

What prompted the investigation and when did it begin?

What are the names and ranks of the soldiers who are under investigation?

What, if any, action has the guard taken against them?

When will the investigation be concluded?

Is there any indication that members of the recruiting and retention unit were also involved in dealing drugs?

2. I am told the broader sexual assault problem in the Alaska National Guard has been going on for years. Why did it take so long for this investigation to happen?

If so, how many do your numbers show?

"I reported to police and the next thing I know I was getting my butt chewed by General Katkus for going out of the chain of command with this stuff," he said.

Is that an accurate characterization? Did you ever discourage anyone from taking complaints to law enforcement? Did you ever involve law enforcement in this issue and, if not, why not?

Has law enforcement taken any action against your soldiers for sexual assault within the past five years?

6. I am also told sexual harassment is a substantial problem in the Alaska National Guard. Is that the case and, if so, what has the guard done about it?

7. What is the current status of the following soldiers?

Setting the record straight for Alaskans
April 28, 2014
By Governor Sean Parnell

In response to a recent opinion piece (Sunday, April 27) regarding the Alaska National Guard that was full of false statements and inferences designed to mislead readers, I am compelled to set the record straight.

First and foremost, the author's claim that I did nothing when first hearing the concerns from National Guard chaplains about sexual assault complaints is utterly false.

Since my days in the state Legislature to my time as governor, my top priority has been to eliminate sexual assault and domestic violence in Alaska, including the military.

The chaplains provided general information to me that sexual assaults were occurring in the Guard, but because of their duty of confidentiality to the people they counsel, the chaplains could not disclose names of victims, perpetrators, or specific circumstances.

Nevertheless, even without specific enough details to pinpoint a victim or case, I went to Adjutant General Tom Katkus, requesting information regarding what the chaplains had told me. I made sure through Gen. Katkus that Guard members have a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations are taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including appropriate penalties.

Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referrals to the appropriate law enforcement agency, such as the Anchorage Police Department.

Further, the opinion piece asserts that Sen. Fred Dyson came to me a number of times with concerns about what he heard from the same chaplains. During Sen. Dyson's visit with me last fall, he too had only general allegations. On Feb. 26, 2014, Sen. Dyson gave me the name of a Guard member who was willing to provide specific detail.

Within 24 hours of that meeting, I personally phoned the person named by Sen. Dyson. In that call, I learned of specific, but unverified allegations, causing me to question the existing reporting and investigation process.

Two days later, within a day of getting specific details about the reporting system – not two weeks, as the columnist claims – I sent my request to General Grass, chief of the National Guard Bureau, for a review of all open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among Alaska National Guard members.

The National Guard Bureau responded quickly, and currently has a team in Alaska conducting the review.

The columnist's claim that our administration had enough specifics to act on before 2014 is based on two instances: First, the writer alleges that Katie TePas of my office

RE: Request for Investigator, Office of Complex Administrative Investigations

Dear General Grass,

I request the detailing of a CNGB Complex Investigation Program Investigator to investigate open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard. I request that you issue a detailed memorandum allowing the investigator to act under my authority to gain access to State personnel and records to the extent allowed under State law and regulation.

I am extremely proud of our Alaska National Guard members and their professionalism in carrying out their duties. However, I remain deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard. Not only are individuals victimized and traumatized in these circumstances, but collectively our National Guard is harmed – from morale to mission damage.

In recent years, Adjutant General Thomas Katkus has emphasized strong systems for reporting, investigating, and tracking such cases; and he has raised awareness among Guard members to these issues through "sensing" sessions. Information I recently learned, however, compels me to write and seek an outside look at our Alaska National Guard's training, reporting, investigations, and case dispensation practices related to the areas I outlined above. Where a number of matters were referred to civilian law enforcement who declined to investigate, I ask you to review those matters, as well. In my estimation, the review should include the National Guard's command structure and its responses to these cases, up to and including TAG.

I am willing to meet with your investigator, along with my Chief of Staff, Mike Nizich, in order to assist in planning and conducting the investigation. I have directed my Chief of Staff to ensure your investigator receives the full cooperation of State National Guard personnel. I have directed my

Attorney General, Michael Geraghty, to provide legal advice as necessary. When the investigation is complete, I will make myself or my designee available for an Out-Brief with the investigator. Your investigator will receive full cooperation from all units, guardsmen and women, and civilians within the Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs who are under my authority. If your investigator receives resistance in regard to the investigation from any individual under my authority, please have your investigator contact my Chief of Staff or my Deputy Chief of Staff, Cindy Sims.

Your investigator's point of contact is Chief of Staff Mike Nizich at 907-465-3500 or Deputy Chief Cindy Sims at 907-269-7450. They will provide cell numbers once initial contact has been made.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

MAY 2 1 2014

Dear Senator Murkowski:

This is in response to your letter dated June 19, 2013, regarding allegations that the command climate within the Alaska National Guard (AKNG) is not conducive to reporting and investigating sexual assaults and that, in some instances, officials may have taken steps to cover up incidents of sexual assault.

Our letter of July 18, 2013, indicated that the DoD Hotline referred the allegations to the Department of the Army Inspector General (Army IG) for action (case number 20130620-014429). Our letter of March 6, 2014, indicated that officials within the Directorate for Investigations of Senior Officials (ISO) opened case number 20130715-014791-CASE-01 to monitor the senior official investigation by the Army IG.

On April 15, 2014, the Army IG completed the investigation and forwarded the Report of Investigation to ISO officials for review. The Army IG investigation found AKNG command climate sensing sessions did not identify concerns regarding sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting, and that The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents.

The Army IG report noted the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, AKNG, received reports of 11 alleged sexual assault incidents (since February 2012) and promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities. Alaska State Statute, "Military Code of Alaska," Section 26.05, dictates that Alaska state civilian law enforcement authorities investigate, and the Alaska civilian criminal system prosecute, cases involving AKNG member suspects. The TAG took adverse administrative action on the only two cases upon which he could act; those which substantiated sexual assault allegations against AKNG members. In one case, the TAG discharged the subject from the AKNG, and in the other, he initiated the subject's separation.

On May 6, 2014, ISO Oversight Branch officials completed a review of the Army IG investigation and concurred with the findings and conclusions.

Should you have questions, please contact me at 703-604-8324.

Sincerely,

Larry D. Turner

Lindsey,

Thank you. Togiak Public Library & Cultural Center is proud to announce the opening of our new library building. This project is a rehab of part of the old Togiak School. Our new building was completed after five years of work. We appreciate the support from the Rasmuson Foundation, the Pebble Partnership, the Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation, the Bristol Bay Economic Development Corporation, the City of Togiak, and the Togiak Traditional Council. We have also received support from the Friends of Dillingham Library, the Fisheries Foundation, Gates Foundation, and the Pick.Click. and Give Program of the Permanent Fund Dividend.

Our new library has a center for children age 0-5 to help them develop literacy skills before they begin school. This program is in affiliation with the Alaska Imagination Library. In addition, we are developing an Alaska and Yup'ik Cultural Corner to affirm our native roots and heritage. In conjunction with the Alaska OWL program and the Federal E-Rate program, we have computers, free internet services, and Distance Delivery programs.

Thanks again for the support from the governor.

BOI/PR

Sent: Wednesday, March 26, 2014 7:19 PM

Governor Parnell,

I just got done reading the ADN article regarding you looking into sexual assaults in the Alaska Army National Guard, and I felt compelled to write you.

I was In the Guard from 2005 until 2013. I had one deployment to BOI/PR. I respectfully ask that you to take a look at cases from farther back than 2010.

While I was deployed, A person named BOI/PR was our XO. Before we even left for the deployment, this man was non stop making sexual unwanted comments to me. (I was an BOI/... at the time, and the BOI/PR on the deployment.

It got worse and worse, and I was straightforward with him telling him that I was not interested, besides being uncomfortable because of the difference in rank. He persisted in making extremely inappropriate comments to me. When I had to work in the same building as him, he would come up to me and say "You know BOI/PR, I can make promotions happen, you know all you would need to do..." I had made it clear to the Col., the SGM and the convoy commander that I wanted to get outside the wire and go on missions. The last thing I wanted to do was just sit on Base the whole year. Apparently BOI/PR found this out, because he came up to me in the command center room and said "you know I can get you outside the wire, right?" He showed up at my barracks several times, and told my roomates he was going to "borrow" something from me which was a complete lie. When I was home one time, he was making comments on the cement block outside, and then he BOI/PR I quickly went inside and began crying. This was something that I felt very strongly about and this comment made me the angriest. I avoided him as much as I possibly could. My supervisor who was BOI/PR asked me what was wrong because I had been acting different.

I finally after months broke down and told him. I couldn't take it anymore. He immediately had me go talk to the SGM (BOI/PR). I then had to have a sit down talk with First Sgt's, two SGM's and the Commander (BOI/PR)

Within TWO DAYS BOI/PR was sent to another base and I did not see him until his Court Martial. I wasn't going to make this so long but I want to explain. After word got out, MANY more women came forward with allegations. He was court martialed on base, I had to write a sworn statement and testify against this man. Other females testified as well. He got a year or two sentence, kicked out of the Military, and loss of all benefits. The reason I am writing this is because the whole time before the trial I kept hearing, "oh he's done this his whole military career, they just swept it under the rug" I heard this from SO MANY PEOPLE. I was disgusted. So if it hadn't been covered up, he wouldn't CONTINUE to be able to do this to people? I didn't understand.

I was fairly new to the military, and was beginning to think this was just the way it was. After the trial, someone told me that they contacted approximately forty women who either had relations with the BOI/PR or were harassed/assaulted by him. This makes me sick. My chain of command did EXACTLY the right thing and immediately took care of this situation.

I was supposed to be notified when he got released from Prison. I wasn't. In fact, he called MY PARENTS house looking for me a few months ago. I can't stand that I have to still think about this person. It makes me feel really bad for all of those people he did this to and were to scared to come forward.

I realize this was a while ago. I realize he got punished. But what he did is not ok, and if he would have gotten more than a "talking to" or slap on the wrist YEARS ago, how many of these incidents could have been avoided?

Things of this nature should not be swept under the rug. I had a female Major come up to me and thank me for coming forward because he had been doing it to her as well, but she said she never had the guts to say anything. This issue is obviously not just BOI/PR . Just take this email into consideration if you will. Feel free to contact me if you would like, but I don't want this email to go anwhere else. I have already wasted to much time on this person. I jst felt in my gut I needed to write you and tell you my story. Thank you for reading.

You're kidding me, right? Of the four politicians I wrote, your office is the ONLY one who never responded. Then when you do, I get the Lois Lerner "Oh, our computer screwed up" excuse. No, the issue is not resolved. His separation board was BOI/PR and he is STILL in the guard. I am very interested to see what was in the NGB OCI's report, IF it ever becomes public. I would love to speak about this ongoing issue over the phone, as in email it would be far too long of a conversation. Please have someone from your office, preferably someone who can give me answers, call me at BOI/PR .

I have served my country for the past BOI/PR years, the first BOI/PR as an active duty soldier based at Ft. Wainwright, and the last BOI/PR as an Alaska Army National Guardsman based out of BOI/PR. Over these past BOI/PR years, I have not only been through, but excelled through countless trials and tribulations the vast populous can never begin to imagine. I completed one tour in BOI/... in BOI/PR, where I saw my brethren permanently scarred and disfigured. I completed some of the Army's toughest, most demanding training in some of the harshest climates. I missed my first-born child's first birthday. My knees cause me constant pain from the countless miles of running and ruck marching. My left hip pops every time I move it, causing pain from the IED (improvised explosive device) that bashed my left side against the truck I was riding in. My ears constantly ring, causing seriously degraded hearing from all the rounds, not only that I have fired, but also the ones cracking over my head, because fortunately the insurgent sniper was not as good a shot as he thought.

All that said, if you were to ask me if I would do it over again, my answer, without hesitation would be an emphatic "I absolutely would!" because I have also had countless life-altering positive accomplishments. I will forever have the pride and satisfaction that I voluntarily stood up to serve my country in a time of war on multiple fronts and survived. I have gotten to travel the world, even if most of the places I have been were desolate wastelands. I have made bonds with friends, brothers that no number of miles can break. I have learned skills so few people get the opportunity to see first-hand let alone master. I have seen the stuff movies are made of. I have felt the concussion of explosions, both friendly and enemy, and I will forever know that almost child-like excitement that comes with it.

Unfortunately the past year and a half of my military career has brought a sour note to my service, not because of my own misdeeds, but those of others. About BO... years ago, I decided to change my MOS (military occupational specialty) from BOI/PR to BOI/PR
BOI/PR. When I did, my new supervisor became BOI/PR. It became obvious early on that we seemingly had a lot in common. We were both prior infantry, both sniper trained, and both had an "old-military" mentality of accountability and integrity above all else. I flourished in my new role as a BOI/PR, and established myself as the non-commissioned officer best suited to take over the role of BOI/PR when my supervisor went to a d ifferent position in the unit. In BOI/PR, I was in BOI/PR completing the necessary training for my new MOS when rumors started flying that my wife was supposedly having an inappropriate relationship with BOI/PR. My wife caught word of it, and immediately told me about the rumors. I reported it to BOI/PR, and he quickly put the blame for the rumors on the wife of another NCO in my section and dismissed it as purely rumors based on jealousy because I was going to take over as BOI/PR. That NCO and his family had, until then, been very close with my family and I, and after learning of BOI/PR's findings, we regrettably had a falling out, keeping our relationship strictly professional. I returned from BOI/..., got promoted, and became the BOI/PR.

Fast forward to BOI/PR at our annual training in BOI/PR. While my section and I were up at our observation point for three days doing a live fire exercise, I ha d an opportunity to have a serious talk with the NCO mentioned earlier regarding what had happened back in BOI/PR. He told me that there was a lot more that my wife was not telling me, and that it had been bothering him since our falling out. He told me he could no longer keep the information he had to himself. He told me they had screen shots of text message conversations between my wife and his wife, where my wife detailed some of the things BOI/PR had been saying and doing behind my back. He was hesitant to give me specific details, for fear of reviving prior conflicts, but told me that I should have a serious conversation with my wife.

When I got home I finally convinced my wife to come clean and tell me what she had been hiding from me for so long. She told me he had done things ranging from excessive complimenting to inappropriate touching, all the way up to pressuring my wife into telling him she loved him. He would regularly tell her things like "You look smoking hot." and "I only used BOI/PR to get close to you." and "If you stick with me, I will make sure your husband flies through the ranks." She told me he was constantly sending her text messages and would not stop. She told me that he had pressured her into telling him she loved him. She told me the only reason she hadn't told me sooner was because he used his rank and position to intimidate her and held my promotion over her head.

I got on my cell phone provider's website to substantiate what my wife had told me. I found that several months had hundreds, and sometimes thousands of text messages between BOI/PR and my wife. Most specifically, the month of BOI/PR, when I was in BOI/..., he obviously took advantage of my absence, sending and receiving over 5,000 text messages. There were also phone conversations, many of which were longer conversations than my wife and I typically have on the phone. I took all of what I had found to my commander and first sergeant, and they both immediately said it required serious action. They sent it up the chain of command, until it got to the brigade commander, then BOI/PR. He assigned a special investigating officer, BOI/PR, who was to come to BOI/PR to investigate the allegations, not only of BOI/PR's actions towards my wife, but other disturbing offenses committed towards female soldiers and inappropriate activities conducted in the BOI/PR armory after business hours.

BOI/PR came to BOI/PR in mid BOI/PR and conducted his investigation, interviewing several critical witnesses. The brigade commander decided it warranted further investigation and he briefed the state commander, Brigadier General Mike Bridges and the state command sergeant major, Command Sergeant Major Pam Harrington. He submitted his recommendation for BOI/PR's removal from the AGR program and a TDY move to Anchorage for separation proceedings. Throughout this process my wife and I were promised by my squadron commander, BOI/PR, the brigade commander, then- BOI/PR, and the state SARC (Sexual Assault Response Coordinator) Octavia Thompson that we would be kept updated on the case and how it was proceeding.

For the next two and a half to three months, we heard nothing other than "JAG is reviewing the case before they proceed". Finally, in late BOI/PR, along with my Command Sergeant Major and First Sergeant, briefed me that BOI/PR would be going TDY to Anchorage very soon for the remainder of the investigation. Nearly a month and a half later, we had heard nothing from anyone regarding the case. I confronted my commander, BOI/PR and my First Sergeant, BOI/PR, regarding the broken promise of being kept in the loop and the lack of communication. They told me that he was being processed for discharge, but that nothing had changed. I expressed to them that if that was in fact the case, then a two minute phone call to the victim should be pretty easy, at least to let her know that it was still on-going and that the unit had not forgotten their promise to her. My commander, BOI/PR called my wife that evening and apologized for the break-down in communication and gave her the same, limited information he had given me earlier that day.

Almost exactly one month later, I was advised that BOI/PR would be in town for the week of BOI/PR in order to sign items over to another leader. That weekend I found out from a subordinate soldier, who was not even part of the investigation, that BOI/PR had expressed to him that he had been going to mental health, and that the doctor "thought there might be something wrong" with him, and that they were allegedly going to prescribe him medication. The following Monday I asked my First Sergeant if he knew about the c onversation. He said he knew nothing about it. I raised the point that it had already come out that BOI/PR had previously threatened the other NCO involved in the investigation for questioning him regarding his conduct with the wives of soldiers, and how that information coupled with the new information of BOI/PR seeing a mental health professional raised serious safety and security concerns with not only myself and my family, but the other NCO involved and his family. My family and I recently moved to BOI/PR, and have opted not to give the unit our new address for safety and security reasons, however BOI/PR knows where the other NCO lives. Coincidentally, the week BOI...

BOI/PR was in town, someone falsely accused the other NCO involved in the investigation of involvement in a hit-and-run. Fortunately, the other NCO was at work, furthermore, the vehicle he was allegedly driving, as described by the other driver with vehicle description, plate number, and driver de scription (mid-day, while he was at work) had been sitting at his house and had not been moved for a week, as he was on call with his civilian employer, therefore his personal vehicle was covered in snow and had no fresh tracks showing movement.

We are in the seventh month since this investigation began, and we still have gotten very little information, the case is moving at a snail's pace, and quite frankly, my family lives in fear and shame for what has happened and what could potentially happen if BOI/PR were to decide he wanted vengeance for my wife coming forward. We had filed for a restraining order early on, however, despite the mountain of evidence we presented to the magistrate, compared to BOI/PR 's blank legal pad and the response of "I cannot refute the allegations, I am simply here to find out the terms of the restraining order." the magistrate somehow determined there was "not enough evidence to warrant a restraining order". My wife used to frequent ly go to the armory, volunteering her time to help coordinate family programs and unit morale events such as last year's unit Christmas party. Now she has sworn off the National Guard, and wants nothing to do with the unit. She no longer even supports me being in the National Guard, but endures my monthly duty because she knows it is a commitment I made.

Speaking of commitments, jumping back to BOI/PR , shortly before going to my training in BOI/... , I extended my contract for an additional BOI/PR in order to be eligible to attend my training. Shortly after arriving in BOI/... , the unit retention NCO contacted me and notified me there was a mistake on my contract, and that we needed to re-do it right away. I gave him the FAX number where he could send the new contract, and told him as soon as he sent it, I would sign it and send it back. The following day, I went to receive the FAX, and found he had never sent it. I contacted the retention NCO, and he said that his higher-ups said it could wait until I returned in early BOI/PR . When I returned, I immediately made contact with him to re-do my contract and he said he would get it taken care of and let me know when it was ready. This went on for several months, until we were just a few months away from my original ETS (Estimated Time of Separation), when I told my chain of command I was worried that it would not get done before my ETS, and that I would have no choice but to ETS because the contract was null and void. I also learned that the retention NCO failed to do the incentive contract he had promised, saying I would be paid a $10,000 incentive for my extension of
BOI/PR .

My ETS was originally in BOI/PR . By BOI/PR the unit finally started digging into what needed to be done, and found that someone had already mistakenly put the contract into the system, and that I was stuck with it, and would not get an incentive bonus. Our personnel NCOIC, BOI/PR went to great lengths researching regulation and policy to find a solution. He was finally able to find a solution that would result in the modification of the contract I signed in the BOI/PR , and I would then be able to sign a new contract, to include an incentive bonus contract. My ETS was adjusted to BOI/PR , and at the end of the last week of BOI/PR they finalized the new contract, this time extending for BOI/PR for an incentive bonus of $5,000. I was informed that the bonus would begin processing the day after my ETS, which was BOI/PR , and that it would take roughly 30 to 45 days to be deposited into my account. Well, we all know what happened with the government shut-down on BOI/PR , and obviously it delayed my incentive.

At the beginning of BOI/PR , when I spoke to my commander and first sergeant regarding the lack of communication about my wife's case, I also asked about my bonus, as it had been a month and I h ad heard no information about the status or timeline of my bonus.
They told me it was at PEC and NGB in Washington D.C. and that it should be deposited within a couple of weeks. A month later, and in true keeping of my unit's style, with no follow-up or communication as promised, I asked again, about my bonus. Three days later, I received a phone call from my commander stating that my bonus was still at PEC and NGB being reviewed. I am obviously getting nowhere with my unit, so I have decided to reach out to you. I truly hope that you can help me sort out what is going on with my bonus, and perhaps gain more ground than my unit is willing to attempt.

As I said earlier, I have served BOI/PR years in the military, and never once have I even gotten so much as a negative counselling statement. I do my best to set the example and uphold the highest standards. In the course of less than a year I have brought my section from a circus in shambles to the shining star of the brigade at our last annual training. My subordinates would do anything for me, because they know I would do anything for them. Perhaps that is just the mindset and mentality instilled in me by my grandfather, the World War 2 veteran. Perhaps I should be a bit more willing to change and adapt to the times, but in my mind, the generation of my grandfather was known as the best generation for a reason. They stood up for what was right, and accepted nothing less. If someone acted a fool or failed to make good on a promise, they were held accountable for it. I do not know when the military changed it's standard and deemed the current conduct acceptable, but it will never be acceptable in my mind.

In my mind, the military, not to mention the Alaska National Guard, with all it's rich heritage and history, should present a better image than that. I learned the Army Values in basic training. Loyalty. Duty. Respect. Selfless Service. Honor. Integrity. Personal Cou rage. I never would have imagined those values would become notional, only used on the recruiting commercials. The AGR's (guardsmen who have a full-time active job working for the National Guard) have developed a system of good-ol-boy back scratching where they take care of each other, only to trample all over the M-Day soldiers. They fail to realize, that as AGR's, they have a job solely to support the M-Day soldier that comprises the vast majority of the unit. They are too busy browsing The Chive or their Facebook accounts to ensure that the citizen soldiers who sacrifice so much for the unit are at least getting the compensation they are promised, compensation which is a mere fraction of the compensation for the very limited work the AGR's perform. The AGR's have forgotten what it is like to be an M-Day soldier, to have to scrape for every hour at their civilian job, just to make a meager income, trying to make ends meet. They forget that they get paid twice what most M-Day soldiers make in their civilian job, while doing half the work. They don't appreciate the fact they get that paycheck regardless of what time they show up, leave, or how long a lunch they take. When they turn a weekend drill into a Friday, Saturday, and Sunday drill with less than a month's notice, threatening soldiers with AWOL if they do not attend that Friday drill after they have already told their civilian employer, who pays far more, they could work. When they expect soldiers to turn their normal half hour lunch break into an hour and a half lunch break to meet their wants, causing that solider to miss out on an extra hour of pay, which, of course, the unit won't compensate for. For some of us, that extra hour is a day worth of fuel in our boiler keeping our families warm at night, or a dinner on the table to help our children grow. Many of the AGR's cannot even legitimately pass an Army Physical Fitness Test, often times faking the numbers so they are allowed to keep th eir job and get promoted to ranks they do not deserve and lower the standard that much more. These practices are not just the practices of one, but the majority. They are not only accepted by the chain of command in BOI/PR, but rewarded with illegitimate promotions. I am quickly learning why it is so common to hear so many locals in BOI/PR talk down about the military, and I just wish there was something I could do to change it. Hopefully with your help something can be done to change it. The tendency among the AGR's is to squirt a bit of oil on the squeaky wheels such as myself in order to quiet it down, only to resume pushing the cart through the mud puddle. Perhaps the problem is not the wheel, but the individual pushing the cart.

It is important to review all sections contained in this report. Compare the information presented in Section III, Perceptions of Discrimination, Section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison, along with Appendix, Written Comments from Your Organization. Doing so can sometimes help to validate potential areas of concern.

I. HOW TO INTERPRET YOUR DEOCS RESULTS

1. Start by looking at the demographic breakout in Part II, which shows who completed the survey. The charts provide a visual display of respondents by their demographic features. Survey respondents can select any option when completing the demographic portion of the survey, so numbers may not match the personnel assigned. Determine if the participants represent the overall assigned population.

2. Review section III, Perceptions of Discrimination. This shows perceptions of these incidents in the workplace during the past 12 months, actions taken to address them, and members' satisfaction with issue resolution.

3. Review section IV, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR). This covers perceptions of leadership support, knowledge of sexual assault reporting options, perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, and bystander intervention climate.

4. Review section V, which provides climate factor results broken out by demographic subgroup, facilitating direct comparison between complementary groups. Higher averages reflect more positive ratings. Results are displayed using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively reflecting above average, average, and below average.

5. Review section VI, Overall Unit Summary. This provides a comparative analysis for each of the factor areas, comparing your unit's current average with its parent Service branch. Results are displayed using the same color coding scheme.

6. Review section VII, which shows responses to the individual climate factor questions

7. Review section VIII, which shows provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report.

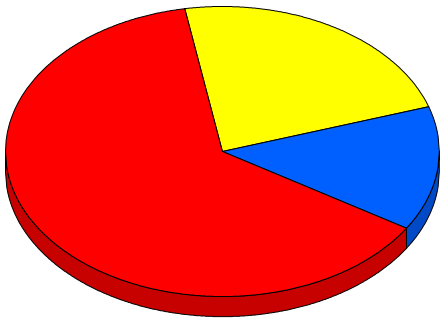
8. Review responses to Locally Developed Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

9. Review responses to Short Answer Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

10. Review written comments and look for trends. Determine whether the comments support the numerical data.

11. If needed, conduct interviews to further characterize organizational issues and strengths, and opportunities for improvement.

12. If needed, review the organization's written records and reports to determine validity of perceptions revealed by the survey and interviews.



MAKING CLIMATE ASSESSMENT RESULTS WORK FOR YOUR ORGANIZATION

1. Share the results with members of your organization.
2. Involve key leaders; let members know you are acting on their feedback.
3. If needed, establish an action team to develop and implement a plan for organizational improvement.
4. Conduct another climate assessment in accordance with your Service component directives to determine the effectiveness of the corrective actions that were taken to remedy validated perceptions.

If you or your staff requires assistance, do not hesitate to contact the DEOCS Support Team at DSN 854-2675/4217 or commercial (321) 494-2675/4217.

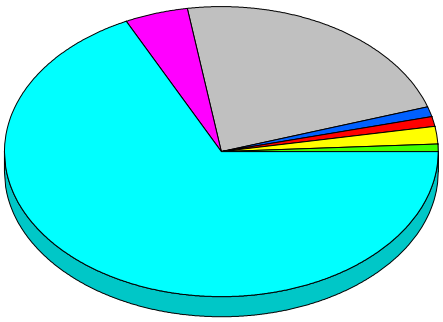
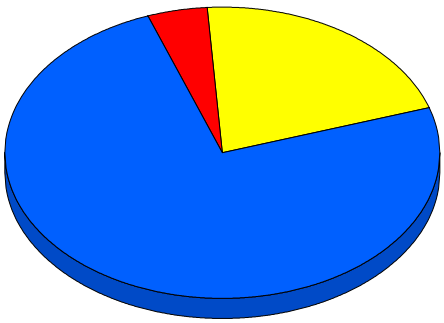
II. DEMOGRAPHIC BREAKOUT



MINORITY vs MAJORITY

	Frequency	Percent
Minority	65	13.83
Majority	298	63.40
Declined	107	22.77
Total	470	100.00



For the majority/minority subgroup categories, the majority category includes all respondents who listed their race as "White," and their ethnicity as "not Hispanic." All other respondents are included in the minority subgroup.

RACE

III. PERCEPTION OF DISCRIMINATION

This section addresses whether members of the organization experienced discrimination and sexual harassment, directed from members of the organization, during the last 12 months; whether they reported the incident; and their satisfaction with how the reported incident was resolved.

Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization (Mark all that apply):

	Frequency	Percent
Race/Nat Orig/Color	5	12.20
Sexual Harassment	3	7.32

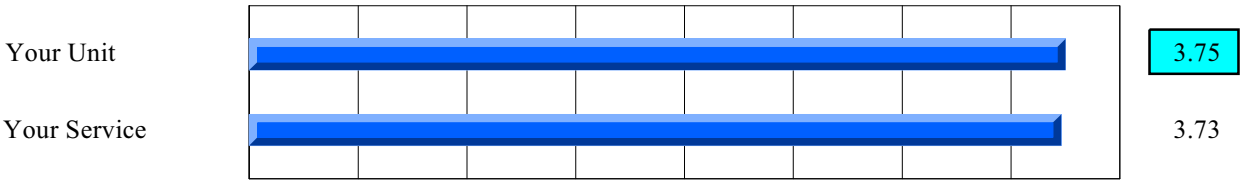
IV. SEXUAL ASSAULT PREVENTION AND RESPONSE



This section addresses members' perceptions of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) climate within your organization. Specifically, this section includes members' perceptions of the following topic areas:

1) Perceptions of Safety
2) Chain of Command Support
3) Publicity of SAPR Information
4) Unit Reporting Climate
5) Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault
6) Unit Prevention Climate
7) Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Below you will find the overall unit summary information pertaining to the SAPR climate within your organization, compared to the DEOMI database for your Service. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. Your organization's average is displayed along with its respective Service branch average.

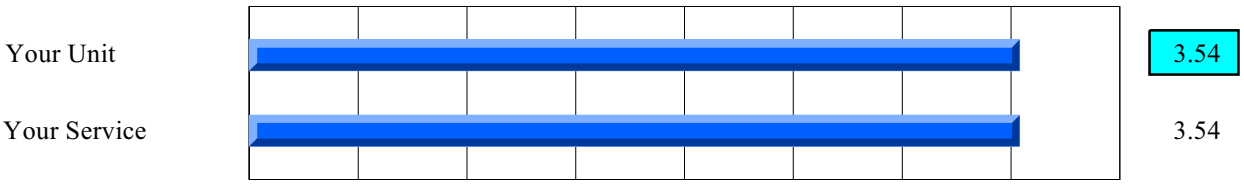
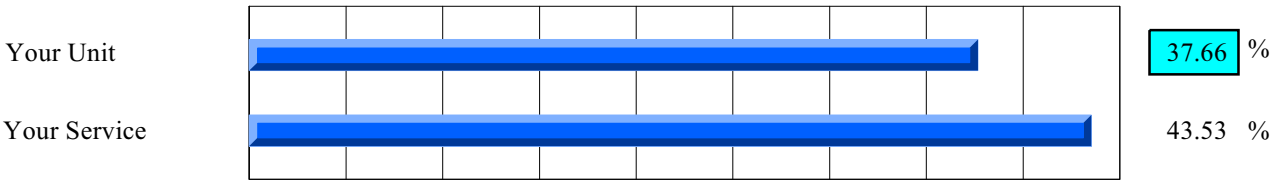
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.65 - 3.84

Chain of Command Support



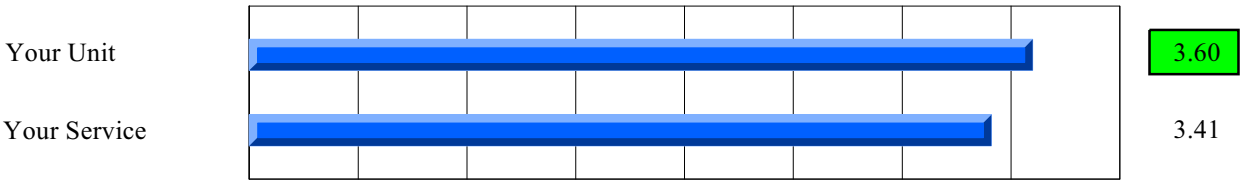
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.35 - 3.65

Publicity of SAPR Information



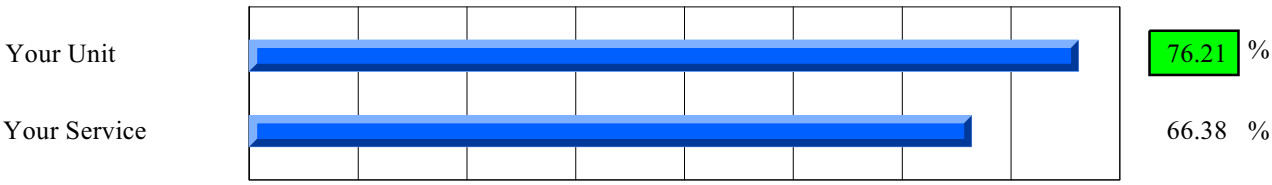
Range of "Near Service" Average = 2.69 - 3.04

Unit Reporting Climate



Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.42 - 3.69

Zero Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault



Range of "Near Service" Average = 31.88 - 54.66

Unit Prevention Climate

Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.23 - 3.58

Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Range of "Near Service" Average = 61.61 - 71.43

Perceptions of Safety

Perceptions of Safety refers to members' feelings of safety from being sexually assaulted where they currently live and perform their work/duties. Two questions measure Perceptions of Safety; each item is measured on a four-point scale, where respondents may select very unsafe, unsafe, safe, or very safe.

Table 3 displays Perceptions of Safety where individuals live, subdivided by residence and respondents' perceptions of safety where they work. The table displays the percentage of members who indicated they feel safe or very safe combined into "Safe" and displays the percentages of members who indicate they feel unsafe or very unsafe combined into "Unsafe." In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Table 3. Respondents' Perceptions of Safety

To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you currently live:	Safe		Unsafe		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
On-base/post/station	27	100.00	0	0.00	27	100.00
Off-base/post/station	437	98.65	6	1.35	443	100.00
To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you perform your work/duties:	460	97.87	10	2.13	470	100.00

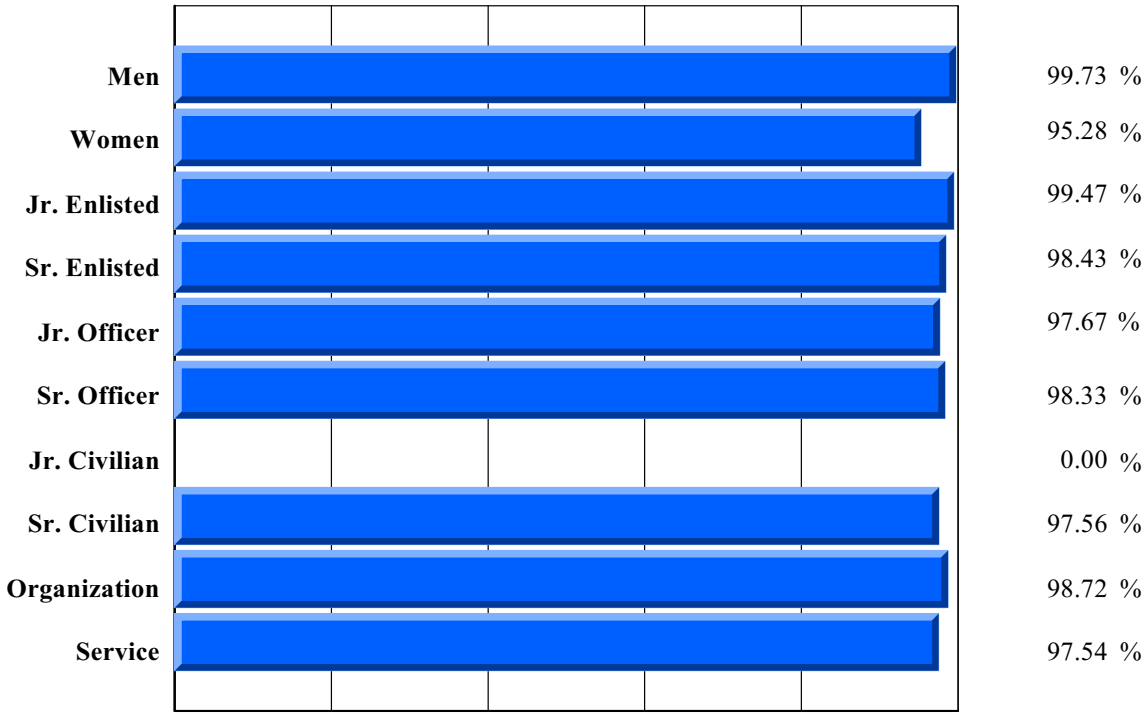
Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 7 displays the percentage of respondents who feel "Safe" where they live by demographic subgroups. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Figure 7. Respondents' Perceptions of Safety where they Live by Demographic Subgroups

To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you currently live?



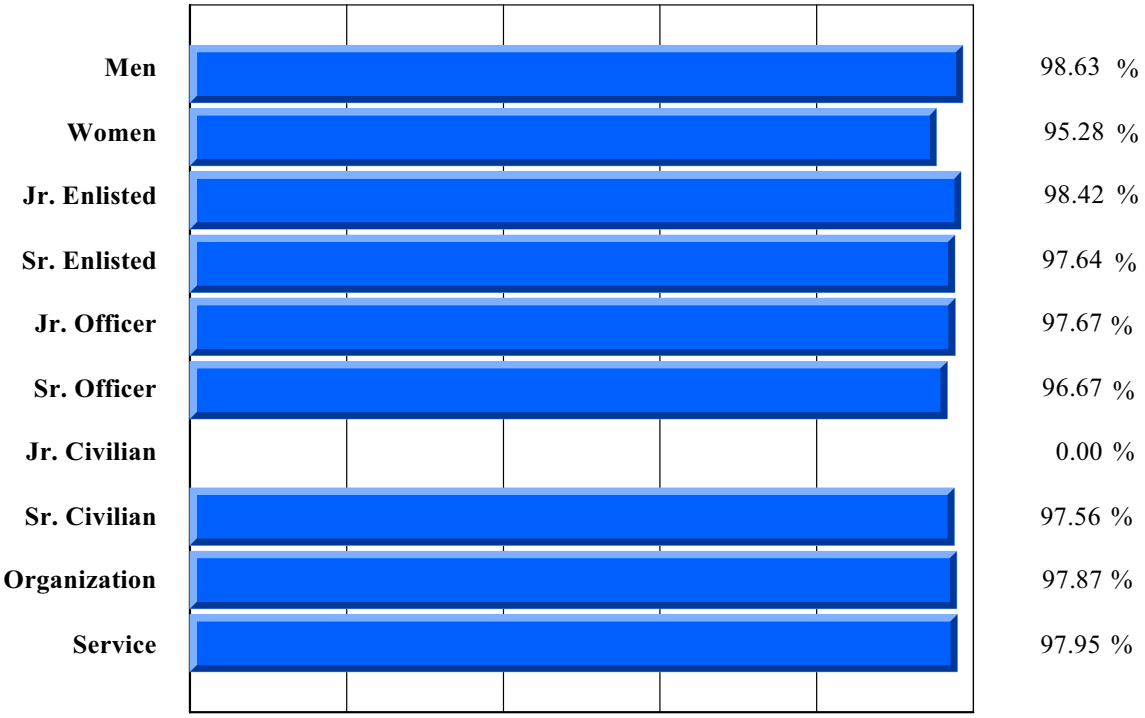


Figure 8 displays the percentage of respondents who feel "Safe" where they work by demographic subgroups. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you perform your work/duties?

Recommendations:

While Perceptions of Safety may not necessarily reflect the actual level of risk faced by an individual or group, the reasoning behind such perceptions may yield valuable information about a number of environmental risks that pertain not only to sexual assault, but also to domestic violence, substance abuse, disruptive conditions in living quarters, and other problems that require command attention. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by residence and by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Foster and encourage first-line supervisor involvement in the detection of potential threats and risks within your unit. About 80% of the sexual assaults within the Department of Defense occur between people that know each other. Consequently, standard physical security measures may not always address the factors that give rise to sexual assaults between co-workers, friends, and acquaintances. Well-trained and empowered first-line supervisors are likely the first to become aware of behaviors that contribute to increased risk for sexual assault and other disruptive behaviors within the unit.
- As appropriate, encourage your unit leaders to regularly visit military living quarters - especially during evenings and weekends.
- Consider contacting base law enforcement and criminal investigators to obtain local threat information, for both on- and off- base housing areas.
- Review and modify as appropriate "party" and alcohol use policies in on-base living quarters. Many interactions that lead to sexual assault begin in social settings and often involve alcohol. Such policies should promote responsible alcohol use, encourage all involved to be on the lookout for situations at risk for sexual assault, and outline how to safely address inappropriate behavior.
- Encourage professional workplace behavior and intervention against those who do not behave respectfully. Research has found that the presence of unchecked sexual harassment within a unit increases the likelihood of sexual assault within that unit. Unit leadership must not only enforce these standards but also set the example.

Chain of Command Support

Chain of Command Support refers to members' perceptions of the extent to which command behaviors are targeted towards preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where members would feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Seven questions measure Chain of Command Support; each item is measured on a four-point scale assessing extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

Table 5 displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive command behaviors to a moderate extent or a great extent. Additionally, this table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive behaviors to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 5. Respondents' Perceptions of Chain of Command Support

To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Promote a unit climate based on "respect and trust"	389	82.77	81	17.23	470	100.00
Refrain from sexist comments and behaviors	447	95.11	23	4.89	470	100.00
Actively discourage sexist comments and behaviors	441	93.83	29	6.17	470	100.00
Provide sexual assault prevention and response training that interests and engages you	399	84.89	71	15.11	470	100.00
Encourage bystander intervention to assist others in situations at risk for sexual assault or other harmful behavior	437	92.98	33	7.02	470	100.00
Encourage victims to report sexual assault	434	92.34	36	7.66	470	100.00
Create an environment where victims feel comfortable reporting sexual assault	419	89.15	51	10.85	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Chain of Command Support index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the seven Chain of Command Support questions. Figure 9 displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable Chain of Command Support. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Chain Of Command Support index provides insight into how unit members perceive leadership's behaviors related to preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where victims would feel comfortable reporting sexual assault. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on those items that get a less favorable rating. For example, if the chain of command is not seen as actively discouraging sexist comments and behaviors, clearly set your expectations with your unit leaders and consider inviting an installation resource in to help improve their skill set. Some sexist comments and behaviors may be so common practice that they escape scrutiny by those using them. Capturing a wide variety of perspectives from people within and outside your leadership chain can help you identify problem areas. Unchecked sexist comments and behaviors communicate to offenders that the unit is a place that tolerates treating someone unfairly because of their gender. This kind of climate may act as a "green light" for those who perpetrate sexual assault.
- Emphasize the importance of reporting sexual assault and getting needed assistance.
- Refrain from using the phrase "zero tolerance" on an individual unit-level. While no one should ever tolerate, condone or accept sexual assault, use of this term may have the unintended effect of keeping victims from reporting; no service member wants to be the person that shatters the commander's expectation that "zero" sexual assaults will occur in the unit. Rather, emphasize that sexual assault has no place in your unit - but if it does occur, encourage those impacted to choose one of the reporting options and get care.
- Adjust supervision policies to allow unit members to engage care and other resources without intrusive questioning. An environment that is conducive to reporting also allows victims a reasonable amount of flexibility to schedule and attend appointments for care and assistance. While personnel accountability is important, victim feedback indicates that supervisors often ask such intrusive questions about the nature of care appointments that victims sometimes forego reporting the crime and getting care so as to not attract negative attention.
- Seek out training opportunities that encourage small group discussion and active participation. "One size fits all" training rarely imparts lasting changes in knowledge, skills, and behavior. Members between the ages of 18 to 25 may be most at risk for sexual assault, but many at this age see themselves as impervious to this and other harms. Small group discussions with a mentor can help overcome such resistance and impart lasting change. Contact your servicing Sexual Assault Response Coordinator for meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.

Additional Resources:

Training materials and discussion guides that can be used in smaller groups are available at www.sapr.mil. Also, follow links on sapr.mil to your Service webpage for additional materials.

Consider attending DEOMI's Leadership Team Awareness Seminar (LTAS). Target audience for LTAS is senior officers (commanders and key staff/department heads O-3/O-6) and senior enlisted advisors (E-7/E-9) as well as civilians including legal officers, chaplains, and inspector general personnel in leadership positions. Duration of the course is 5 Days (40 hours). For more information contact: Student Management Division for enrollment into LTAS, Commercial (321)494-5653/7543 (DSN 854).

Publicity of SAPR Information

Publicity of SAPR Information refers to the extent to which members' perceive that SAPR-related information and resources is publicly displayed and openly communicated. There are three questions measuring Publicity of SAPR Information; each item is measured on a four-point scale measuring extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

The following table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there to be a favorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a moderate extent or a great extent. This table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there is an unfavorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 6. Respondents' Perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information

To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Publicize the outcomes of sexual assault cases	162	34.47	308	65.53	470	100.00
Publicize sexual assault reporting resources (e.g., Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contact information; Victim Advocate contact information; awareness posters; sexual assault hotline phone number)	413	87.87	57	12.13	470	100.00
Publicize the Restricted (confidential) Reporting option for sexual assault	374	79.57	96	20.43	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 10 provides results of the Publicity of SAPR Information index by demographic subgroups. The Publicity of SAPR Information index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the three publicity questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00..

Recommendations:

The Publicity of SAPR Information index can provide insight about the availability of SAPR-related information and resources. Publically discussing issues surrounding sexual assault and displaying SAPR resources is an important step in decreasing the stigma associated with this crime. Communicating openly with members of your organization about sexual assault will also help to raise awareness of the issue. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to increase the availability of these resources and information. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Publicize SAPR information to prevent sexual assaults in your unit:
  - Empower your command team to publically display SAPR information by guiding them to resources that they can utilize (see Additional Resources section below).
  - Integrate SAPR messaging into existing communication plans and publications (e.g., town halls, all hands, commander's call, newsletter, etc.).
  - Feature sexual assault related resources in unit common areas. Publicize the DoD sexual assault hotline (www.safehelpline.org) as an anonymous, free, and available worldwide 24 hours a day resource.
  - Disseminate policy letters against sexism, sexual harassment, and sexual assault.
- Publicize SAPR information in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - Take the opportunity to discuss the SAPR program, the support resources available to both victims and accused members, and prevention topics.
  - Actively discourage rumors and speculation about the allegation.
  - Consider appropriate releases of information to keep unit members informed and derail rumors. The release must consider the privacy of the victim, the accused, and the sensitivity of the matters involved. Work with your local criminal investigators and staff judge advocate to determine what can be said, when it is released, and how to communicate such information.
  - To the extent legally permissible, discuss the outcomes and disciplinary actions, if any, of sexual assault allegations.

Additional Resources:

Nationally, Sexual Assault Awareness Month (SAAM) occurs in April and commits to raising awareness and promoting the prevention of sexual violence through use of special events and public education. SAAM provides commands/installations an annual opportunity to highlight DoD and Service policies addressing sexual assault prevention and response. Visit www.sapr.mil for Sexual Assault Awareness Month Campaign materials.

Stay up-to-date on SAPR policies by visiting www.sapr.mil and sign up to receive the SAPRO's quarterly newsletter (SAPR Source).

Visit www.safehelpline.org for outreach materials.

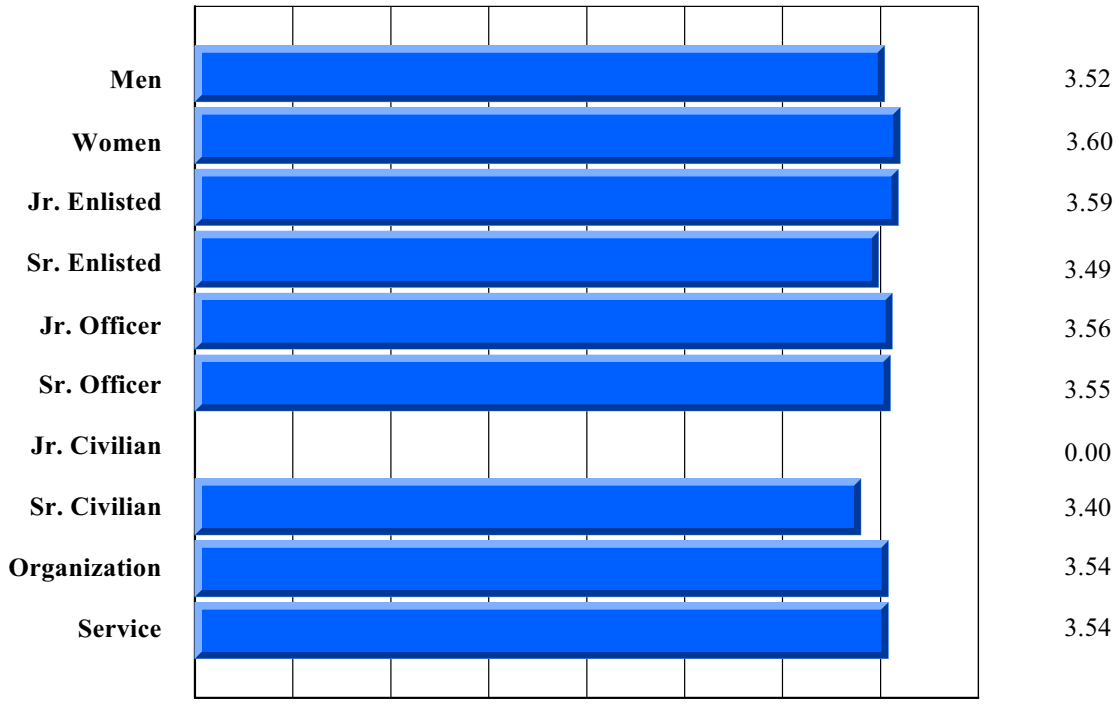
Visit www.deomi.org for sexual assault awareness observance posters.

Unit Reporting Climate

Unit Reporting Climate measures the extent to which members perceive that the chain of command would take appropriate actions to address an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault and that there would be minimal social and professional retaliation if a sexual assault was reported. Ten questions measure Unit Reporting Climate, where respondents may select not at all likely, slightly likely, moderately likely, or very likely.

Table 7 below displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they perceive individuals within the unit (chain of command or members) are moderately likely or very likely to engage in the positive Unit Reporting Climate behavior. The table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they believe the individuals within the unit are slightly likely or not at all likely to engage in the positive reporting climate behavior. Within this scale, there are three questions that ask about the extent of negative behavior and are therefore reverse scored to remain consistent with a higher score being more favorable (indicated with an asterisk).

Table 7. Respondents' Perceptions of Unit Reporting Climate



If someone were to report a sexual assault to your current chain of command, how likely is it that:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
The chain of command would take the report seriously.	450	95.74	20	4.26	470	100.00
The chain of command would keep knowledge of the report limited to those with a need to know.	432	91.91	38	8.09	470	100.00
The chain of command would forward the report outside the unit to criminal investigators.	412	87.66	58	12.34	470	100.00
The chain of command would take steps to protect the safety of the person making the report.	440	93.62	30	6.38	470	100.00
The chain of command would support the person making the report.	437	92.98	33	7.02	470	100.00
The chain of command would take corrective action to address factors that may have led to the sexual assault.	428	91.06	42	8.94	470	100.00

Unit members would label the person making the report a troublemaker (*).	405	86.17	65	13.83	470	100.00
Unit members would support the person making the report.	427	90.85	43	9.15	470	100.00
The offender(s) or their associates would retaliate against the person making the report (*).	386	82.13	84	17.87	470	100.00
The career of the person making the report would suffer (*).	401	85.32	69	14.68	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 11 provides the results of the Unit Reporting Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. The Unit Reporting Climate index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all likely, "2" equals slightly likely, "3" equals moderately likely, and "4" equals very likely, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the 10 Unit Reporting Climate questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting a more favorable Unit Reporting Climate. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Unit Reporting Climate index can provide insight into how members perceive a report of sexual assault would be handled by the chain of command and unit members. These perceptions are important as they will likely influence members' willingness to report a sexual assault. Use the favorable and unfavorable ratings on the survey items as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to improve Unit Reporting Climate perceptions. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Optimize Unit Reporting Climate to prevent sexual assault in your unit:
  - Encourage your command team to take action on those items that receive a less favorable rating. For instance, if unit members perceive that the chain of command does not take sexual assault reports seriously, follow up with unit leaders to ensure that this responsibility is not taken lightly. Service members perceive that sexual assault reports are not taken seriously when allegations are ignored, leadership at any level encourages victims to drop their report, and victims are scrutinized and blamed for getting victimized.
  - Ensure DoD and Service requirements are met with regard to case progress and updates to victims. DoD Instruction 6495.02 requires the establishment of a multi-disciplinary case management group (CMG), co-chaired by the Deputy Installation Commander and the SARC. While each Service may refer to this group by a different name (i.e., Sexual Assault Review Board, etc.), the CMG should meet monthly to review individual cases, improve reporting, facilitate monthly victim updates, and to discuss process improvements to ensure system accountability and victim access to quality services. As a commander, you must attend the monthly CMG until final disposition has been taken in the case. You are also responsible for providing monthly updates to victims of sexual assault on their case.
- Maintain a favorable Unit Reporting Climate in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - All sexual assault allegations that come to the chain of command's attention must be referred to a military criminal investigative organization (CID, NCIS or AFOSI). Commanders may not conduct their own internal or preliminary investigation (e.g., commander's inquiry, "15-6 investigations", etc.). Once the investigation is complete, you or a more senior commander must review the criminal investigation, evaluate the evidence with the assistance of a judge advocate, and determine any appropriate disciplinary action to be taken. If the victim and the accused are both within your unit, it is important that you should remain objective (fair and impartial) and take appropriate action based on the evidence.
  - Discourage members from participating in "barracks gossip" or grapevine speculation about the case or investigation. Remind everyone to wait until all the facts are known and final disposition of the allegation has occurred before reaching conclusions. While victims must see their allegations are taken seriously, the alleged offender is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Remind members that discussion of a possible sexual assault incident might compromise an ongoing investigation.
  - Emphasize the importance of balance in the justice system. "Choosing sides" is never fair to the parties involved, and can rip a unit apart. Supporting the victim and the accused through the military justice process does not require anyone to take a side. Rather, as a commander, you have a duty to ensure both parties (if both are under your command) are connected with appropriate services and support.

- Advise those who may have knowledge of the events leading up to or surrounding the incident to fully cooperate with any investigation involved.
- Consider some form of targeted unit refresher training; or have an outside expert address the unit regarding preventive measures, as well as some of the emotional or psychological feelings that may manifest themselves, affect the unit, and require the unit's response during the course of the investigation. It is important that unit members not see "refresher training" as a group punishment because someone reported a sexual assault. Rather, small group discussions led by knowledgeable leaders are often the most helpful.
- Continuously monitor the unit's overall climate to ensure neither the victim and/or the alleged offender is being ostracized. Prevent organizational splintering by communicating your expectations with first-line supervisors; encourage supervisors to stop rumors, monitor the formation of cliques, and communicate observed ostracism upwards. Keep in mind that sexual assault is not solely an individual-level issue; it requires a sustained systemic response because it is influenced by a wide-range of individual-, organizational-, and societal-level variables.
- Make victims aware of the option to request an expedited temporary or permanent transfer from their assigned command or base, or to a different location within their assigned command or base. Also keep in mind that alleged offenders may alternatively be moved.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

Table 8. Respondents' Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

In your current unit/organization, which of the following would be the most likely reasons why a victim of sexual assault would not report the incident?	Selected		Not Selected		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Negative impact to career or progress.	125	26.60	345	73.40	470	100.00
Loss of privacy/confidentiality.	193	41.06	277	58.94	470	100.00
Fear of professional retaliation for making the report.	99	21.06	371	78.94	470	100.00
Fear of social retaliation for making the report.	143	30.43	327	69.57	470	100.00

Another reason other than what is provided above.	43	9.15	427	90.85	470	100.00
There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault.	177	37.66	293	62.34	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The figures on the following pages provide results of the Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault questions by demographic subgroups. The figures display the percentage of members that perceive zero barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 12), one to two barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 13), and three or more barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 14) by demographic subgroups. Taken together, these three figures represent the total group members who responded to the survey. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

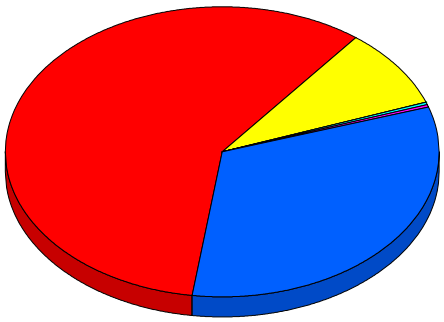
Recommendations:

Due to the nature of sexual assault crimes, victims often do not feel comfortable reporting or talking about their experience. There are steps leadership can take to reduce or eliminate these barriers which would increase the likelihood of a sexual assault being reported. The Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault question can provide insight into why members within your organization may not feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to eliminate perceived barriers within your organization. Compare the percentage of perceived barriers within your organization to the results of your respective service. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to eliminate perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault. While you may never be able to eliminate all barriers to reporting, your work to address these concerns sends a powerful, positive message to victims.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:



- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on barriers that are frequently perceived. Have a frank discussion with members regarding these barriers and be open to members' suggestions for improvement. Take steps to clarify misperceptions and reduce concerns by demonstrating effort towards eliminating that barrier. For example, if members perceive "negative impact to career or progress" to be a barrier to reporting sexual assault within your unit, ask members why this perception exists. Inquire further about this perception and communicate procedures in place to safeguard against negative impact on career. Follow through by addressing this with your CMG to ensure members' careers and progression are not, in fact, affected by reporting a sexual assault.
- As a commander, you must carefully communicate two messages. First, sexual assault is a crime and has no place in your unit. Second, if sexual assault does occur, encourage victims to pick one of the two reporting options and seek assistance. Keep in mind that these messages must be balanced.
- Avoid statements like "zero tolerance" on an individual unit level. While this sounds effective, it actually sends a message to victims that you do not want them to come forward to report: No member wants to be the one to tell their commander that the number of known sexual assaults in the unit is no longer "zero."
- Ensure victims feel comfortable coming forward to report sexual assaults by encouraging them to do so to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Stress to your members that you do not have access to identifying information about victims making Restricted Reports; this will build members' trust in your unit's SARC and Victim Advocate (VA).
- As a commander, you can strengthen member's trust in the reporting process by recommending the most qualified and trained professional to serve in critical advocacy positions.

Unit Prevention Climate (Bystander Intervention)

Unit Prevention Climate, also known as Bystander Intervention Climate, refers to individuals' intentions to act if they were to observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Unit Prevention Climate is measured with two questions; one item is situation based and asks respondents to indicate which action they would take if in a given situation. One item presents respondents with a scenario and asks at which point they would most likely intervene if they witnessed the escalating situation. A summary of the responses collected within your organization are displayed in Figure 15 through Figure 17.

Suppose you see someone secretly putting something in another person's drink. You're unsure what it was. Which of the following are you most likely to do in this kind of situation?

	Frequency	Percent
Confront the person.	151	32.13
Tell the drink owner what you saw.	274	58.30
Seek assistance from someone to help deal with the situation.	42	8.94
Watch the situation to see if it escalates.	1	0.21
Leave to avoid any kind of trouble.	1	0.21
Nothing.	1	0.21

Imagine you go on temporary duty for some training. The first night you go to a restaurant/bar with a large group of colleagues, whom you just met. At what point would you intervene in the following escalating situation?

	Frequency	Percent
A senior leader buys a drink for a person in the group and tells him/her a drink cannot be refused, as doing so would go against tradition.	149	31.70
The senior leader buys a second and third drink for the same person despite his/her repeated objections.	213	45.32
The person appears intoxicated and disoriented, and continues to be the senior leader's main focus of attention.	53	11.28
The senior leader repeatedly hugs the person, rubs his/her shoulders, and offers to walk him/her back to quarters.	21	4.47
You see the senior leader quietly escorting the intoxicated person out of the bar.	8	1.70
As they leave, the person resists the senior leader and says, "No."	19	4.04
In this scenario, I would not intervene at any point.	7	1.49
Total	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Unit Prevention Climate index is the numeric composite of the two bystander intervention climate questions. Figure 17 provides the results of the Unit Prevention Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Respondents were asked if they have observed a situation they believed could have led to a sexual assault within the past 12 months. Respondents' responses to this observation question are displayed in Figure 18.

In the past 12 months, I observed a situation that I believe was, or could have led to, a sexual assault.

	Frequency	Percent
Yes	4	0.85
No	466	99.15
Total	470	100.00

If respondents answered "yes" to the observation of a high risk situation question, they were prompted to identify the response that most closely resembled their actions. Figure 19 displays the responses of those who completed the question across your organization.

If yes, in response to this situation, select the response that most closely resembles your actions:

	Frequency	Percent
I stepped in and separated the people involved in the situation.	1	25.00
I asked the person who appeared to be at risk if they needed help.	0	0.00
I confronted the person who appeared to be causing the situation.	0	0.00
I created a distraction to cause one or more of the people to disengage from the situation.	2	50.00
I asked others to step in as a group and diffuse the situation.	0	0.00
I told someone in a position of authority about the situation.	1	25.00
I considered intervening in the situation, but I could not safely take any action.	0	0.00
I decided to not take action.	0	0.00
Total	4	100.00

Recommendations:

The Unit Prevention Climate index can provide insight into members' intentions to act if they observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to increase bystander intervention within your organization. Look at the frequency of responses to the hypothetical scenario questions and the prevalence of respondents observing a high risk situation question to gain an understanding of how respondents within your organization plan to intervene as well as how they have intervened in the past. Set the expectation that your people must look out for each other, both on and off the battlefield. Encourage safely stepping in to de-escalate the situation when someone looks to be at risk for sexual assault or about to perpetrate a crime. Employ training that relies on scenarios to demonstrate application of bystander prevention concepts and drive small group discussions.

Use Unit Prevention Climate index displayed by demographic subgroups to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic subgroups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to increase bystander intervention within your organization.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Promote bystander intervention by "practicing what you preach." Be an active bystander by calling out sexist remarks and sexually harassing behaviors if they are observed. When appropriate, demonstrate acceptable alternative behaviors as part of the corrective process. This will help provide the motivation and confidence necessary for members within your organization to act.
- It takes some practice and courage to intervene and discourage or stop unacceptable behavior. Teach bystander intervention strategies to motivate and empower your people to watch for questionable behavior or risky choices, take safe action to de-escalate situations, and help ensure personal safety. One approach involves emphasizing the "ABCs" of Bystander Intervention:
    - Assess for safety. Ensure that all parties are safe, and whether the situation requires calling authorities. When deciding to intervene, your personal safety should be the #1 priority. When in doubt, call for help.
    - Be with others. If it is safe to intervene, you are likely to have a greater influence on the parties involved when you work together with someone or several people. Your safety is increased when you stay with a group of friends that you know well.
    - Care for the person. Ask if the target of the unwanted sexual advance, attention, or behavior is okay. Does he or she need medical care? Does he or she want to talk to a Victim Advocate about reporting the matter? Ask if someone they trust can help them get home safely.
- Encourage your members to be receptive to messages from others indicating their behavior is not acceptable.
- Recognizing the rewarding positive personnel behavior can also be an effective strategy to increase and reinforce appropriate bystander behavior.

Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Knowledge of the Restricted Reporting option is assessed with one question. The item reads, "All of the following people can receive an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault. However, a Restricted (confidential) Report can only be made to certain people. Please identify which of the following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report." The Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Victim Advocate, and Military Service Healthcare Personnel can take a Restricted Report. "Anyone in my chain of command" and "Criminal investigator and Military Police Officer" are incorrect answers. These persons cannot take a Restricted Report. Table 9 displays the percentage of members within your organization who correctly and incorrectly identified who can and cannot take a Restricted Report.

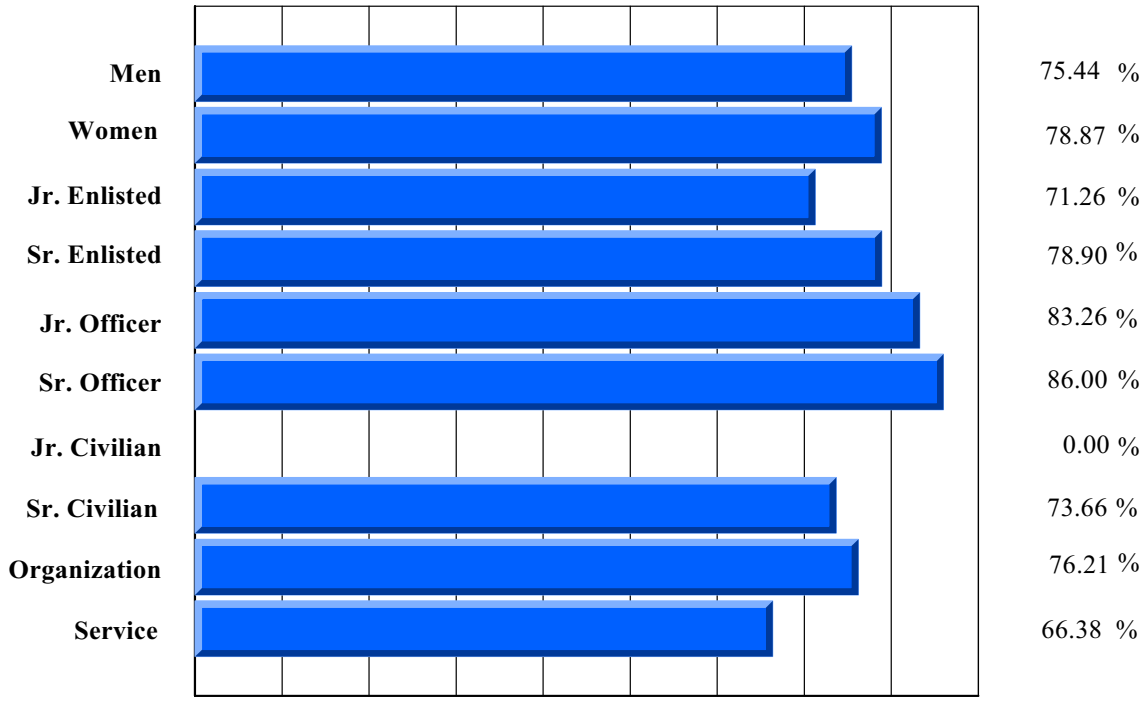

Table 9. Respondents' Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Identify which of following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report:	Correct		Incorrect		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Sexual Assault Response Coordinator	434	92.34	36	7.66	470	100.00
Victim Advocate	367	78.09	103	21.91	470	100.00
Military Service Healthcare Personnel	320	68.09	150	31.91	470	100.00
Anyone in my chain of command	369	78.51	101	21.49	470	100.00
Criminal investigator and Military Police Officer	301	64.04	169	35.96	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 20 displays the average percentage of members who responded correctly, displayed by demographic subgroup, on the Restricted Reporting Knowledge question. The question is scored by averaging the percentage correct across the five response options of the types of people who can and cannot take a Restricted Report. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Department of Defense is committed to ensuring victims of sexual assault are protected; treated with dignity and respect; and provided support, advocacy, and care. The DoD also strongly supports applicable law enforcement and criminal justice procedures that enable persons to be held accountable for sexual assault offenses and criminal dispositions, as appropriate. To achieve these dual objectives, the Department's preference is for complete Unrestricted Reporting of sexual assaults to allow for the provision of victims' services and to pursue accountability. However, Unrestricted Reporting may represent a barrier for victims to access services, when the victim desires no command or law enforcement involvement. Consequently, the DoD recognizes a fundamental need to provide a confidential disclosure vehicle via the Restricted Reporting option.

A Restricted Report allows victims to experience the services and support available to them and receive information about the investigative and military justice process in a means that preserves their confidentiality. Every year, a percentage of victims convert from a Restricted Report to an Unrestricted Report to participate in the justice process. As a result, the Department makes available the Restricted Reporting as a means for victims to become knowledgeable about their legal options. As of January 2014, all Services have specially-trained attorneys to represent victims of sexual assault, regardless of which reporting option is selected. This ability to confer confidentially with an attorney about their case may also encourage more victims to participate in the military justice system.

The Restricted Reporting Knowledge score can provide insight into members' knowledge of the reporting options of sexual assault. Use the correct and incorrect responses as a guide for developing a plan of action to increase awareness and knowledge of the reporting options. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Use this information to enhance the education and training of your personnel.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Periodically take the opportunity to remind everyone of how to make an Unrestricted or Restricted Report. Be sure to include how to contact the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) and Victim Advocate (VA) that service your unit or the installation.
- Emphasize that command has a legal responsibility to follow up on all allegations of sexual assault. Individuals desiring a Restricted Report should contact a SARC, VA, or medical/mental health care provider.
- Publicize that victims of sexual assault may now have an attorney represent them during the military justice process. These attorneys are assigned at the victim's request, regardless of whether a victim makes either a Restricted or Unrestricted Report. SARCs connect victims with these specialized attorneys.
- Training is an important element in sexual assault prevention and response. Provide annual training and encourage members to take this training seriously. A short slide-based training once a year is NOT sufficient to make a lasting impression on your personnel - mostly because none of them expect to become a victim of sexual assault. Contact your servicing SARC for more meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.
- Incorporate specific sexual assault prevention and response monitoring, measures and education into normal command training, readiness, and safety forums (e.g., quarterly training guidance, unit status reports, and safety briefings).
- Discuss your unit's DEOCS results with your installation's SARC and request that he/she conduct additional training or speak at commanders' calls.

V. CLIMATE FACTOR SUBGROUP COMPARISONS

Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Climate Overview

The following chart provides a demographic summary of the SAPR Climate variables. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup; this helps maintain respondent anonymity.

Equal Opportunity / Equal Employment Opportunity / Fair Treatment Factors

VI. OVERALL UNIT SUMMARY

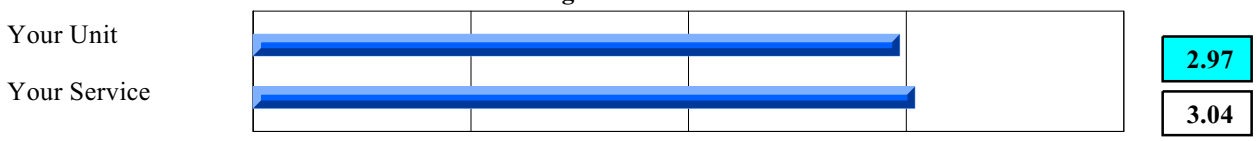
Organizational Commitment



Range of "Near Service" Average = 2.97 - 3.32

Trust in Leadership

VIII. RECOMMENDATIONS

The following section provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report. Based on the data obtained, the DEOCS results for your organization may vary between organizational strengths and concerns. It is important to not only review section VII, DEOCS Summary, but to contrast that information with section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison. Appendix on Written Comments, may also help to validate some areas of concerns within sections VII and V, please ensure you review that area to determine if there are comments that speak directly to any areas of concern.

This section also seeks to provide guidance for additional steps in the climate assessment effort, and prescribe actions to help address organizational concerns.

Share positive results with the organization's members. Compare subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions of climate factors are prevalent among specific groups, and the sources of those perceptions.

Seek to identify-and reinforce-those practices and programs currently in place.

Reinforce behaviors that create a climate of inclusion, supporting and preserving the dignity and worth of all members.

Continue to promote and maintain a healthy human relations climate. This can be done by ensuring all members in the unit understand their roles and responsibilities.

Share positive results to enhance members' commitment to the organization and its mission.

Consider utilizing training aids to further provide awareness and knowledge regarding key factors.

Below Average

It is important to note that some or all of the three lowest averages may actually be comparable to your respective Service averages, and not necessarily represent a negative finding. If any of these averages appear appreciably lower than your Service average, they should be treated as an organizational concern. In cases where low averages, compare the demographic subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions are more obvious among specific groups.

After identifying the specific climate factors with low averages and those demographic subgroups that harbor negative perceptions regarding them, use these findings to plan follow-on assessment efforts, including focus groups, interviews, and written record reviews. Conducting focus groups and interviews can help determine the source and extent of specific perceptions.

Develop an action plan and socialize the plan with members. Set a timeline for the action items designed to address each specific validated concern, and provide timely feedback on progress accomplishing them. This will demonstrate your willingness to listen to your subordinates, and take action to improve conditions when possible.

We trust these recommendations for interpretation will prove useful. DEOMI believes the DEOCS can help commanders improve the readiness within their commands. To make best use of this tool, DEOMI provides tools and products designed to address the mission impacting issues that were identified during the climate assessment process.

It is important to review all sections contained in this report. Compare the information presented in Section III, Perceptions of Discrimination, Section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison, along with Appendix, Written Comments from Your Organization. Doing so can sometimes help to validate potential areas of concern.

I. HOW TO INTERPRET YOUR DEOCS RESULTS

1. Start by looking at the demographic breakout in Part II, which shows who completed the survey. The charts provide a visual display of respondents by their demographic features. Survey respondents can select any option when completing the demographic portion of the survey, so numbers may not match the personnel assigned. Determine if the participants represent the overall assigned population.

2. Review section III, Perceptions of Discrimination. This shows perceptions of these incidents in the workplace during the past 12 months, actions taken to address them, and members' satisfaction with issue resolution.

3. Review section IV, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR). This covers perceptions of leadership support, knowledge of sexual assault reporting options, perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, and bystander intervention climate.

4. Review section V, which provides climate factor results broken out by demographic subgroup, facilitating direct comparison between complementary groups. Higher averages reflect more positive ratings. Results are displayed using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively reflecting above average, average, and below average.

5. Review section VI, Overall Unit Summary. This provides a comparative analysis for each of the factor areas, comparing your unit's current average with its parent Service branch. Results are displayed using the same color coding scheme.

6. Review section VII, which shows responses to the individual climate factor questions

7. Review section VIII, which shows provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report.

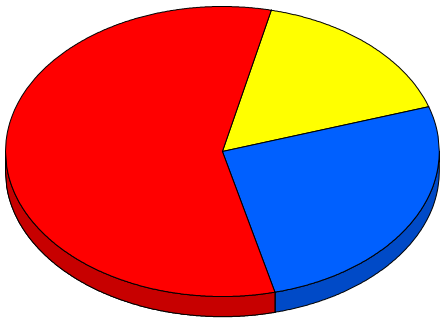
8. Review responses to Locally Developed Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

9. Review responses to Short Answer Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

10. Review written comments and look for trends. Determine whether the comments support the numerical data.

11. If needed, conduct interviews to further characterize organizational issues and strengths, and opportunities for improvement.

12. If needed, review the organization's written records and reports to determine validity of perceptions revealed by the survey and interviews.



MAKING CLIMATE ASSESSMENT RESULTS WORK FOR YOUR ORGANIZATION

1. Share the results with members of your organization.
2. Involve key leaders; let members know you are acting on their feedback.
3. If needed, establish an action team to develop and implement a plan for organizational improvement.
4. Conduct another climate assessment in accordance with your Service component directives to determine the effectiveness of the corrective actions that were taken to remedy validated perceptions.

If you or your staff requires assistance, do not hesitate to contact the DEOCS Support Team at DSN 854-2675/4217 or commercial (321) 494-2675/4217.

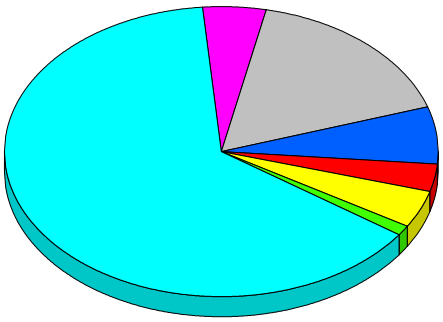
II. DEMOGRAPHIC BREAKOUT



MINORITY vs MAJORITY

	Frequency	Percent
Minority	142	26.25
Majority	311	57.49

III. PERCEPTION OF DISCRIMINATION

This section addresses whether members of the organization experienced discrimination and sexual harassment, directed from members of the organization, during the last 12 months; whether they reported the incident; and their satisfaction with how the reported incident was resolved.

Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization (Mark all that apply):

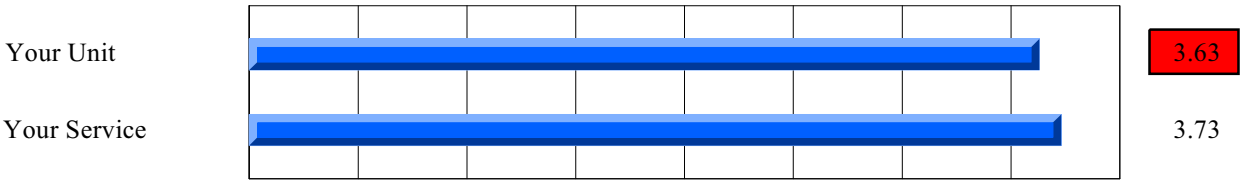
IV. SEXUAL ASSAULT PREVENTION AND RESPONSE



This section addresses members' perceptions of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) climate within your organization. Specifically, this section includes members' perceptions of the following topic areas:

1) Perceptions of Safety
2) Chain of Command Support
3) Publicity of SAPR Information
4) Unit Reporting Climate
5) Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault
6) Unit Prevention Climate
7) Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Below you will find the overall unit summary information pertaining to the SAPR climate within your organization, compared to the DEOMI database for your Service. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. Your organization's average is displayed along with its respective Service branch average.

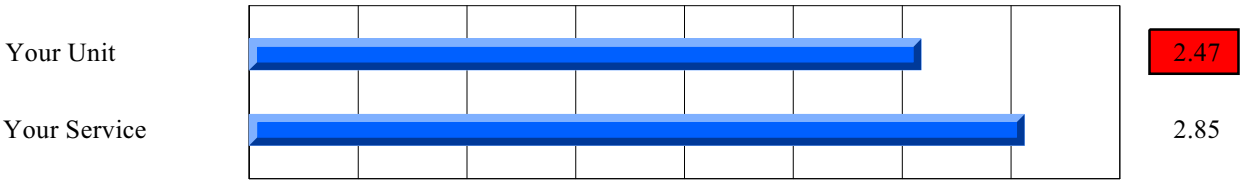
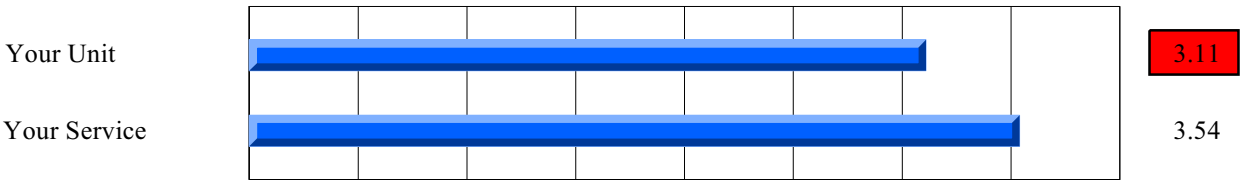
Perceptions of Safety



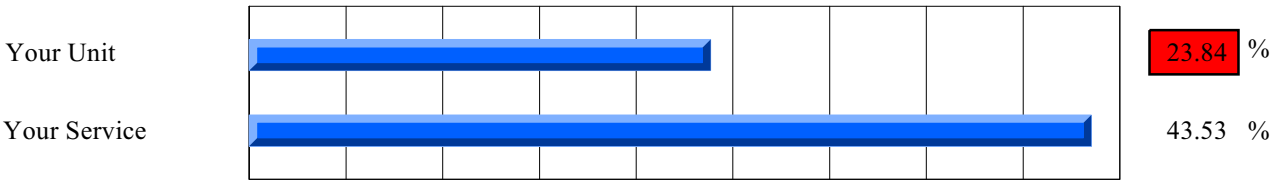
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.65 - 3.84

Chain of Command Support



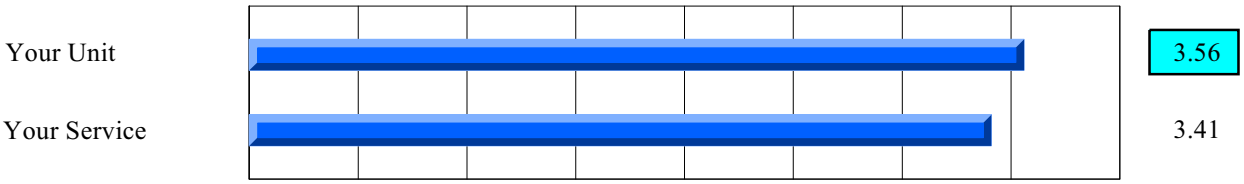
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.35 - 3.65

Publicity of SAPR Information



Range of "Near Service" Average = 2.69 - 3.04

Unit Reporting Climate



Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.42 - 3.69

Zero Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Range of "Near Service" Average = 31.88 - 54.66

Unit Prevention Climate

Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.23 - 3.58

Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Range of "Near Service" Average = 61.61 - 71.43

Perceptions of Safety

Perceptions of Safety refers to members' feelings of safety from being sexually assaulted where they currently live and perform their work/duties. Two questions measure Perceptions of Safety; each item is measured on a four-point scale, where respondents may select very unsafe, unsafe, safe, or very safe.

Table 3 displays Perceptions of Safety where individuals live, subdivided by residence and respondents' perceptions of safety where they work. The table displays the percentage of members who indicated they feel safe or very safe combined into "Safe" and displays the percentages of members who indicate they feel unsafe or very unsafe combined into "Unsafe." In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Table 3. Respondents' Perceptions of Safety

To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you currently live:	Safe		Unsafe		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
On-base/post/station	36	100.00	0	0.00	36	100.00
Off-base/post/station	495	98.02	10	1.98	505	100.00
To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you perform your work/duties:	522	96.49	19	3.51	541	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 7 displays the percentage of respondents who feel "Safe" where they live by demographic subgroups. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

While Perceptions of Safety may not necessarily reflect the actual level of risk faced by an individual or group, the reasoning behind such perceptions may yield valuable information about a number of environmental risks that pertain not only to sexual assault, but also to domestic violence, substance abuse, disruptive conditions in living quarters, and other problems that require command attention. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by residence and by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Foster and encourage first-line supervisor involvement in the detection of potential threats and risks within your unit. About 80% of the sexual assaults within the Department of Defense occur between people that know each other. Consequently, standard physical security measures may not always address the factors that give rise to sexual assaults between co-workers, friends, and acquaintances. Well-trained and empowered first-line supervisors are likely the first to become aware of behaviors that contribute to increased risk for sexual assault and other disruptive behaviors within the unit.
- As appropriate, encourage your unit leaders to regularly visit military living quarters - especially during evenings and weekends.
- Consider contacting base law enforcement and criminal investigators to obtain local threat information, for both on- and off- base housing areas.
- Review and modify as appropriate "party" and alcohol use policies in on-base living quarters. Many interactions that lead to sexual assault begin in social settings and often involve alcohol. Such policies should promote responsible alcohol use, encourage all involved to be on the lookout for situations at risk for sexual assault, and outline how to safely address inappropriate behavior.
- Encourage professional workplace behavior and intervention against those who do not behave respectfully. Research has found that the presence of unchecked sexual harassment within a unit increases the likelihood of sexual assault within that unit. Unit leadership must not only enforce these standards but also set the example.

Chain of Command Support

Chain of Command Support refers to members' perceptions of the extent to which command behaviors are targeted towards preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where members would feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Seven questions measure Chain of Command Support; each item is measured on a four-point scale assessing extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

Table 5 displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive command behaviors to a moderate extent or a great extent. Additionally, this table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive behaviors to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 5. Respondents' Perceptions of Chain of Command Support

To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Promote a unit climate based on "respect and trust"	364	67.41	176	32.59	540	100.00
Refrain from sexist comments and behaviors	442	81.85	98	18.15	540	100.00
Actively discourage sexist comments and behaviors	431	79.81	109	20.19	540	100.00
Provide sexual assault prevention and response training that interests and engages you	399	73.89	141	26.11	540	100.00
Encourage bystander intervention to assist others in situations at risk for sexual assault or other harmful behavior	414	76.67	126	23.33	540	100.00
Encourage victims to report sexual assault	422	78.15	118	21.85	540	100.00
Create an environment where victims feel comfortable reporting sexual assault	379	70.19	161	29.81	540	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Chain of Command Support index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the seven Chain of Command Support questions. Figure 9 displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable Chain of Command Support. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Chain Of Command Support index provides insight into how unit members perceive leadership's behaviors related to preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where victims would feel comfortable reporting sexual assault. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on those items that get a less favorable rating. For example, if the chain of command is not seen as actively discouraging sexist comments and behaviors, clearly set your expectations with your unit leaders and consider inviting an installation resource in to help improve their skill set. Some sexist comments and behaviors may be so common practice that they escape scrutiny by those using them. Capturing a wide variety of perspectives from people within and outside your leadership chain can help you identify problem areas. Unchecked sexist comments and behaviors communicate to offenders that the unit is a place that tolerates treating someone unfairly because of their gender. This kind of climate may act as a "green light" for those who perpetrate sexual assault.
- Emphasize the importance of reporting sexual assault and getting needed assistance.
- Refrain from using the phrase "zero tolerance" on an individual unit-level. While no one should ever tolerate, condone or accept sexual assault, use of this term may have the unintended effect of keeping victims from reporting; no service member wants to be the person that shatters the commander's expectation that "zero" sexual assaults will occur in the unit. Rather, emphasize that sexual assault has no place in your unit - but if it does occur, encourage those impacted to choose one of the reporting options and get care.
- Adjust supervision policies to allow unit members to engage care and other resources without intrusive questioning. An environment that is conducive to reporting also allows victims a reasonable amount of flexibility to schedule and attend appointments for care and assistance. While personnel accountability is important, victim feedback indicates that supervisors often ask such intrusive questions about the nature of care appointments that victims sometimes forego reporting the crime and getting care so as to not attract negative attention.
- Seek out training opportunities that encourage small group discussion and active participation. "One size fits all" training rarely imparts lasting changes in knowledge, skills, and behavior. Members between the ages of 18 to 25 may be most at risk for sexual assault, but many at this age see themselves as impervious to this and other harms. Small group discussions with a mentor can help overcome such resistance and impart lasting change. Contact your servicing Sexual Assault Response Coordinator for meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.

Additional Resources:

Training materials and discussion guides that can be used in smaller groups are available at www.sapr.mil. Also, follow links on sapr.mil to your Service webpage for additional materials.

Consider attending DEOMI's Leadership Team Awareness Seminar (LTAS). Target audience for LTAS is senior officers (commanders and key staff/department heads O-3/O-6) and senior enlisted advisors (E-7/E-9) as well as civilians including legal officers, chaplains, and inspector general personnel in leadership positions. Duration of the course is 5 Days (40 hours). For more information contact: Student Management Division for enrollment into LTAS, Commercial (321)494-5653/7543 (DSN 854).

Publicity of SAPR Information

Publicity of SAPR Information refers to the extent to which members' perceive that SAPR-related information and resources is publicly displayed and openly communicated. There are three questions measuring Publicity of SAPR Information; each item is measured on a four-point scale measuring extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

The following table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there to be a favorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a moderate extent or a great extent. This table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there is an unfavorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 6. Respondents' Perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information

To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Publicize the outcomes of sexual assault cases	156	28.89	384	71.11	540	100.00
Publicize sexual assault reporting resources (e.g., Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contact information; Victim Advocate contact information; awareness posters; sexual assault hotline phone number)	385	71.30	155	28.70	540	100.00
Publicize the Restricted (confidential) Reporting option for sexual assault	310	57.41	230	42.59	540	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 10 provides results of the Publicity of SAPR Information index by demographic subgroups. The Publicity of SAPR Information index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the three publicity questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00..

Recommendations:

The Publicity of SAPR Information index can provide insight about the availability of SAPR-related information and resources. Publically discussing issues surrounding sexual assault and displaying SAPR resources is an important step in decreasing the stigma associated with this crime. Communicating openly with members of your organization about sexual assault will also help to raise awareness of the issue. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to increase the availability of these resources and information. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Publicize SAPR information to prevent sexual assaults in your unit:
  - Empower your command team to publically display SAPR information by guiding them to resources that they can utilize (see Additional Resources section below).
  - Integrate SAPR messaging into existing communication plans and publications (e.g., town halls, all hands, commander's call, newsletter, etc.).
  - Feature sexual assault related resources in unit common areas. Publicize the DoD sexual assault hotline (www.safehelpline.org) as an anonymous, free, and available worldwide 24 hours a day resource.
  - Disseminate policy letters against sexism, sexual harassment, and sexual assault.
- Publicize SAPR information in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - Take the opportunity to discuss the SAPR program, the support resources available to both victims and accused members, and prevention topics.
  - Actively discourage rumors and speculation about the allegation.
  - Consider appropriate releases of information to keep unit members informed and derail rumors. The release must consider the privacy of the victim, the accused, and the sensitivity of the matters involved. Work with your local criminal investigators and staff judge advocate to determine what can be said, when it is released, and how to communicate such information.
  - To the extent legally permissible, discuss the outcomes and disciplinary actions, if any, of sexual assault allegations.

Additional Resources:

Nationally, Sexual Assault Awareness Month (SAAM) occurs in April and commits to raising awareness and promoting the prevention of sexual violence through use of special events and public education. SAAM provides commands/installations an annual opportunity to highlight DoD and Service policies addressing sexual assault prevention and response. Visit www.sapr.mil for Sexual Assault Awareness Month Campaign materials.

Stay up-to-date on SAPR policies by visiting www.sapr.mil and sign up to receive the SAPRO's quarterly newsletter (SAPR Source).

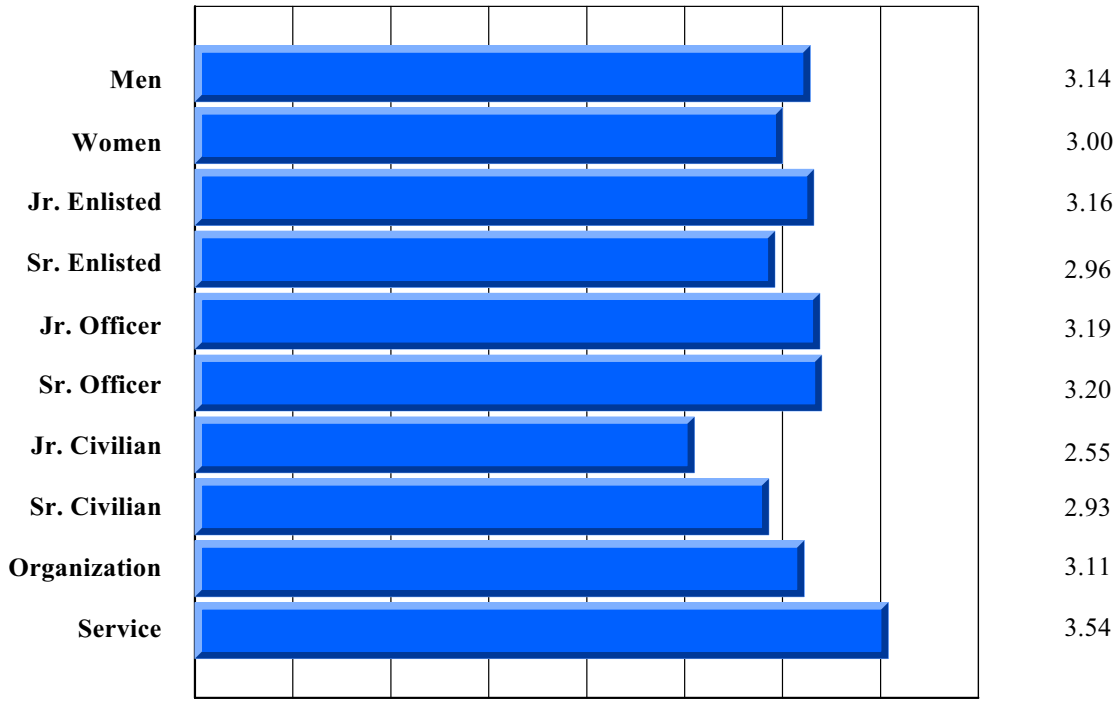
Unit Reporting Climate

Unit Reporting Climate measures the extent to which members perceive that the chain of command would take appropriate actions to address an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault and that there would be minimal social and professional retaliation if a sexual assault was reported. Ten questions measure Unit Reporting Climate, where respondents may select not at all likely, slightly likely, moderately likely, or very likely.

Table 7 below displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they perceive individuals within the unit (chain of command or members) are moderately likely or very likely to engage in the positive Unit Reporting Climate behavior. The table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they believe the individuals within the unit are slightly likely or not at all likely to engage in the positive reporting climate behavior. Within this scale, there are three questions that ask about the extent of negative behavior and are therefore reverse scored to remain consistent with a higher score being more favorable (indicated with an asterisk).

Table 7. Respondents' Perceptions of Unit Reporting Climate



If someone were to report a sexual assault to your current chain of command, how likely is it that:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
The chain of command would take the report seriously.	437	80.78	104	19.22	541	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 11 provides the results of the Unit Reporting Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. The Unit Reporting Climate index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all likely, "2" equals slightly likely, "3" equals moderately likely, and "4" equals very likely, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the 10 Unit Reporting Climate questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting a more favorable Unit Reporting Climate. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Unit Reporting Climate index can provide insight into how members perceive a report of sexual assault would be handled by the chain of command and unit members. These perceptions are important as they will likely influence members' willingness to report a sexual assault. Use the favorable and unfavorable ratings on the survey items as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to improve Unit Reporting Climate perceptions. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Optimize Unit Reporting Climate to prevent sexual assault in your unit:
  - Encourage your command team to take action on those items that receive a less favorable rating. For instance, if unit members perceive that the chain of command does not take sexual assault reports seriously, follow up with unit leaders to ensure that this responsibility is not taken lightly. Service members perceive that sexual assault reports are not taken seriously when allegations are ignored, leadership at any level encourages victims to drop their report, and victims are scrutinized and blamed for getting victimized.
  - Ensure DoD and Service requirements are met with regard to case progress and updates to victims. DoD Instruction 6495.02 requires the establishment of a multi-disciplinary case management group (CMG), co-chaired by the Deputy Installation Commander and the SARC. While each Service may refer to this group by a different name (i.e., Sexual Assault Review Board, etc.), the CMG should meet monthly to review individual cases, improve reporting, facilitate monthly victim updates, and to discuss process improvements to ensure system accountability and victim access to quality services. As a commander, you must attend the monthly CMG until final disposition has been taken in the case. You are also responsible for providing monthly updates to victims of sexual assault on their case.
- Maintain a favorable Unit Reporting Climate in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - All sexual assault allegations that come to the chain of command's attention must be referred to a military criminal investigative organization (CID, NCIS or AFOSI). Commanders may not conduct their own internal or preliminary investigation (e.g., commander's inquiry, "15-6 investigations", etc.). Once the investigation is complete, you or a more senior commander must review the criminal investigation, evaluate the evidence with the assistance of a judge advocate, and determine any appropriate disciplinary action to be taken. If the victim and the accused are both within your unit, it is important that you should remain objective (fair and impartial) and take appropriate action based on the evidence.
  - Discourage members from participating in "barracks gossip" or grapevine speculation about the case or investigation. Remind everyone to wait until all the facts are known and final disposition of the allegation has occurred before reaching conclusions. While victims must see their allegations are taken seriously, the alleged offender is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Remind members that discussion of a possible sexual assault incident might compromise an ongoing investigation.
  - Emphasize the importance of balance in the justice system. "Choosing sides" is never fair to the parties involved, and can rip a unit apart. Supporting the victim and the accused through the military justice process does not require anyone to take a side. Rather, as a commander, you have a duty to ensure both parties (if both are under your command) are connected with appropriate services and support.

- Advise those who may have knowledge of the events leading up to or surrounding the incident to fully cooperate with any investigation involved.
- Consider some form of targeted unit refresher training; or have an outside expert address the unit regarding preventive measures, as well as some of the emotional or psychological feelings that may manifest themselves, affect the unit, and require the unit's response during the course of the investigation. It is important that unit members not see "refresher training" as a group punishment because someone reported a sexual assault. Rather, small group discussions led by knowledgeable leaders are often the most helpful.
- Continuously monitor the unit's overall climate to ensure neither the victim and/or the alleged offender is being ostracized. Prevent organizational splintering by communicating your expectations with first-line supervisors; encourage supervisors to stop rumors, monitor the formation of cliques, and communicate observed ostracism upwards. Keep in mind that sexual assault is not solely an individual-level issue; it requires a sustained systemic response because it is influenced by a wide-range of individual-, organizational-, and societal-level variables.
- Make victims aware of the option to request an expedited temporary or permanent transfer from their assigned command or base, or to a different location within their assigned command or base. Also keep in mind that alleged offenders may alternatively be moved.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

Table 8. Respondents' Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

In your current unit/organization, which of the following would be the most likely reasons why a victim of sexual assault would not report the incident?	Selected		Not Selected		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Negative impact to career or progress.	179	33.09	362	66.91	541	100.00

There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault.	129	23.84	412	76.16	541	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The figures on the following pages provide results of the Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault questions by demographic subgroups. The figures display the percentage of members that perceive zero barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 12), one to two barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 13), and three or more barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 14) by demographic subgroups. Taken together, these three figures represent the total group members who responded to the survey. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

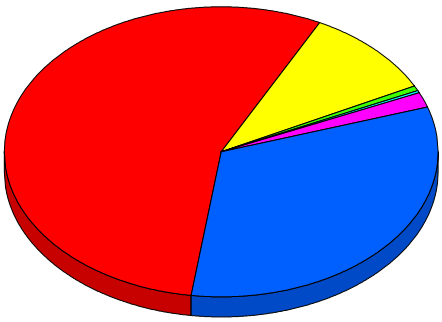
Recommendations:

Due to the nature of sexual assault crimes, victims often do not feel comfortable reporting or talking about their experience. There are steps leadership can take to reduce or eliminate these barriers which would increase the likelihood of a sexual assault being reported. The Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault question can provide insight into why members within your organization may not feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to eliminate perceived barriers within your organization. Compare the percentage of perceived barriers within your organization to the results of your respective service. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to eliminate perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault. While you may never be able to eliminate all barriers to reporting, your work to address these concerns sends a powerful, positive message to victims.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:



- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on barriers that are frequently perceived. Have a frank discussion with members regarding these barriers and be open to members' suggestions for improvement. Take steps to clarify misperceptions and reduce concerns by demonstrating effort towards eliminating that barrier. For example, if members perceive "negative impact to career or progress" to be a barrier to reporting sexual assault within your unit, ask members why this perception exists. Inquire further about this perception and communicate procedures in place to safeguard against negative impact on career. Follow through by addressing this with your CMG to ensure members' careers and progression are not, in fact, affected by reporting a sexual assault.
- As a commander, you must carefully communicate two messages. First, sexual assault is a crime and has no place in your unit. Second, if sexual assault does occur, encourage victims to pick one of the two reporting options and seek assistance. Keep in mind that these messages must be balanced.
- Avoid statements like "zero tolerance" on an individual unit level. While this sounds effective, it actually sends a message to victims that you do not want them to come forward to report: No member wants to be the one to tell their commander that the number of known sexual assaults in the unit is no longer "zero."
- Ensure victims feel comfortable coming forward to report sexual assaults by encouraging them to do so to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Stress to your members that you do not have access to identifying information about victims making Restricted Reports; this will build members' trust in your unit's SARC and Victim Advocate (VA).
- As a commander, you can strengthen member's trust in the reporting process by recommending the most qualified and trained professional to serve in critical advocacy positions.

Unit Prevention Climate (Bystander Intervention)

Unit Prevention Climate, also known as Bystander Intervention Climate, refers to individuals' intentions to act if they were to observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Unit Prevention Climate is measured with two questions; one item is situation based and asks respondents to indicate which action they would take if in a given situation. One item presents respondents with a scenario and asks at which point they would most likely intervene if they witnessed the escalating situation. A summary of the responses collected within your organization are displayed in Figure 15 through Figure 17.

Suppose you see someone secretly putting something in another person's drink. You're unsure what it was. Which of the following are you most likely to do in this kind of situation?

	Frequency	Percent
	175	32.35
	299	55.27
	53	9.80
	3	0.55
	2	0.37
	9	1.66

Imagine you go on temporary duty for some training. The first night you go to a restaurant/bar with a large group of colleagues, whom you just met. At what point would you intervene in the following escalating situation?

	Frequency	Percent
A senior leader buys a drink for a person in the group and tells him/her a drink cannot be refused, as doing so would go against tradition.	204	37.71
The senior leader buys a second and third drink for the same person despite his/her repeated objections.	194	35.86
The person appears intoxicated and disoriented, and continues to be the senior leader's main focus of attention.	62	11.46
The senior leader repeatedly hugs the person, rubs his/her shoulders, and offers to walk him/her back to quarters.	28	5.18
You see the senior leader quietly escorting the intoxicated person out of the bar.	22	4.07
As they leave, the person resists the senior leader and says, "No."	21	3.88
In this scenario, I would not intervene at any point.	10	1.85
Total	541	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Unit Prevention Climate index is the numeric composite of the two bystander intervention climate questions. Figure 17 provides the results of the Unit Prevention Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Respondents were asked if they have observed a situation they believed could have led to a sexual assault within the past 12 months. Respondents' responses to this observation question are displayed in Figure 18.

In the past 12 months, I observed a situation that I believe was, or could have led to, a sexual assault.

	Frequency	Percent
Yes	23	4.25
No	518	95.75
Total	541	100.00

If respondents answered "yes" to the observation of a high risk situation question, they were prompted to identify the response that most closely resembled their actions. Figure 19 displays the responses of those who completed the question across your organization.

If yes, in response to this situation, select the response that most closely resembles your actions:

	Frequency	Percent
I stepped in and separated the people involved in the situation.	3	13.04
I asked the person who appeared to be at risk if they needed help.	4	17.39
I confronted the person who appeared to be causing the situation.	9	39.13
I created a distraction to cause one or more of the people to disengage from the situation.	2	8.70
I asked others to step in as a group and diffuse the situation.	0	0.00
I told someone in a position of authority about the situation.	3	13.04
I considered intervening in the situation, but I could not safely take any action.	1	4.35
I decided to not take action.	1	4.35
Total	23	100.00

Recommendations:

The Unit Prevention Climate index can provide insight into members' intentions to act if they observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to increase bystander intervention within your organization. Look at the frequency of responses to the hypothetical scenario questions and the prevalence of respondents observing a high risk situation question to gain an understanding of how respondents within your organization plan to intervene as well as how they have intervened in the past. Set the expectation that your people must look out for each other, both on and off the battlefield. Encourage safely stepping in to de-escalate the situation when someone looks to be at risk for sexual assault or about to perpetrate a crime. Employ training that relies on scenarios to demonstrate application of bystander prevention concepts and drive small group discussions.

Use Unit Prevention Climate index displayed by demographic subgroups to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic subgroups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to increase bystander intervention within your organization.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Promote bystander intervention by "practicing what you preach." Be an active bystander by calling out sexist remarks and sexually harassing behaviors if they are observed. When appropriate, demonstrate acceptable alternative behaviors as part of the corrective process. This will help provide the motivation and confidence necessary for members within your organization to act.
- It takes some practice and courage to intervene and discourage or stop unacceptable behavior. Teach bystander intervention strategies to motivate and empower your people to watch for questionable behavior or risky choices, take safe action to de-escalate situations, and help ensure personal safety. One approach involves emphasizing the "ABCs" of Bystander Intervention:
    - Assess for safety. Ensure that all parties are safe, and whether the situation requires calling authorities. When deciding to intervene, your personal safety should be the #1 priority. When in doubt, call for help.
    - Be with others. If it is safe to intervene, you are likely to have a greater influence on the parties involved when you work together with someone or several people. Your safety is increased when you stay with a group of friends that you know well.
    - Care for the person. Ask if the target of the unwanted sexual advance, attention, or behavior is okay. Does he or she need medical care? Does he or she want to talk to a Victim Advocate about reporting the matter? Ask if someone they trust can help them get home safely.
- Encourage your members to be receptive to messages from others indicating their behavior is not acceptable.
- Recognizing the rewarding positive personnel behavior can also be an effective strategy to increase and reinforce appropriate bystander behavior.

Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Knowledge of the Restricted Reporting option is assessed with one question. The item reads, "All of the following people can receive an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault. However, a Restricted (confidential) Report can only be made to certain people. Please identify which of the following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report." The Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Victim Advocate, and Military Service Healthcare Personnel can take a Restricted Report. "Anyone in my chain of command" and "Criminal investigator and Military Police Officer" are incorrect answers. These persons cannot take a Restricted Report. Table 9 displays the percentage of members within your organization who correctly and incorrectly identified who can and cannot take a Restricted Report.

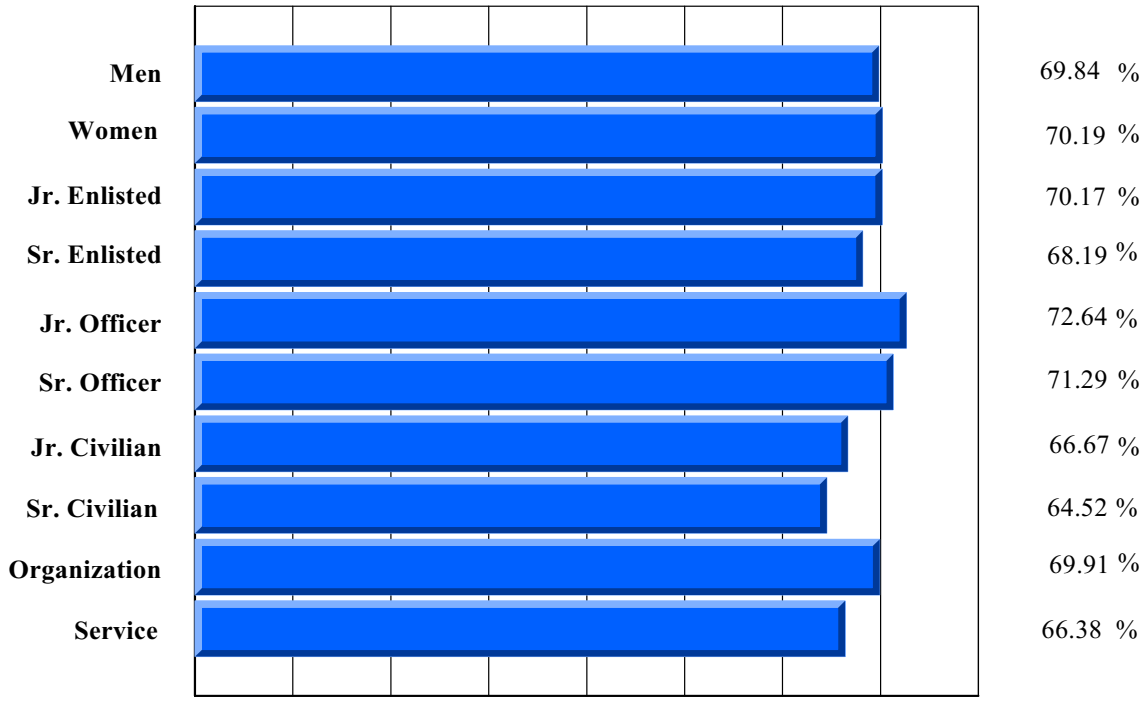

Table 9. Respondents' Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Identify which of following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report:	Correct		Incorrect		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Sexual Assault Response Coordinator	484	89.63	56	10.37	540	100.00
Victim Advocate	398	73.70	142	26.30	540	100.00
Military Service Healthcare Personnel	415	76.85	125	23.15	540	100.00
Anyone in my chain of command	382	70.74	158	29.26	540	100.00
Criminal investigator and Military Police Officer	212	39.26	328	60.74	540	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 20 displays the average percentage of members who responded correctly, displayed by demographic subgroup, on the Restricted Reporting Knowledge question. The question is scored by averaging the percentage correct across the five response options of the types of people who can and cannot take a Restricted Report. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Department of Defense is committed to ensuring victims of sexual assault are protected; treated with dignity and respect; and provided support, advocacy, and care. The DoD also strongly supports applicable law enforcement and criminal justice procedures that enable persons to be held accountable for sexual assault offenses and criminal dispositions, as appropriate. To achieve these dual objectives, the Department's preference is for complete Unrestricted Reporting of sexual assaults to allow for the provision of victims' services and to pursue accountability. However, Unrestricted Reporting may represent a barrier for victims to access services, when the victim desires no command or law enforcement involvement. Consequently, the DoD recognizes a fundamental need to provide a confidential disclosure vehicle via the Restricted Reporting option.

A Restricted Report allows victims to experience the services and support available to them and receive information about the investigative and military justice process in a means that preserves their confidentiality. Every year, a percentage of victims convert from a Restricted Report to an Unrestricted Report to participate in the justice process. As a result, the Department makes available the Restricted Reporting as a means for victims to become knowledgeable about their legal options. As of January 2014, all Services have specially-trained attorneys to represent victims of sexual assault, regardless of which reporting option is selected. This ability to confer confidentially with an attorney about their case may also encourage more victims to participate in the military justice system.

The Restricted Reporting Knowledge score can provide insight into members' knowledge of the reporting options of sexual assault. Use the correct and incorrect responses as a guide for developing a plan of action to increase awareness and knowledge of the reporting options. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Use this information to enhance the education and training of your personnel.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Periodically take the opportunity to remind everyone of how to make an Unrestricted or Restricted Report. Be sure to include how to contact the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) and Victim Advocate (VA) that service your unit or the installation.
- Emphasize that command has a legal responsibility to follow up on all allegations of sexual assault. Individuals desiring a Restricted Report should contact a SARC, VA, or medical/mental health care provider.
- Publicize that victims of sexual assault may now have an attorney represent them during the military justice process. These attorneys are assigned at the victim's request, regardless of whether a victim makes either a Restricted or Unrestricted Report. SARCs connect victims with these specialized attorneys.
- Training is an important element in sexual assault prevention and response. Provide annual training and encourage members to take this training seriously. A short slide-based training once a year is NOT sufficient to make a lasting impression on your personnel - mostly because none of them expect to become a victim of sexual assault. Contact your servicing SARC for more meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.
- Incorporate specific sexual assault prevention and response monitoring, measures and education into normal command training, readiness, and safety forums (e.g., quarterly training guidance, unit status reports, and safety briefings).
- Discuss your unit's DEOCS results with your installation's SARC and request that he/she conduct additional training or speak at commanders' calls.

V. CLIMATE FACTOR SUBGROUP COMPARISONS

Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Climate Overview

The following chart provides a demographic summary of the SAPR Climate variables. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup; this helps maintain respondent anonymity.

Organizational Commitment

VIII. RECOMMENDATIONS

The following section provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report. Based on the data obtained, the DEOCS results for your organization may vary between organizational strengths and concerns. It is important to not only review section VII, DEOCS Summary, but to contrast that information with section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison. Appendix on Written Comments, may also help to validate some areas of concerns within sections VII and V, please ensure you review that area to determine if there are comments that speak directly to any areas of concern.

This section also seeks to provide guidance for additional steps in the climate assessment effort, and prescribe actions to help address organizational concerns.

Share positive results with the organization's members. Compare subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions of climate factors are prevalent among specific groups, and the sources of those perceptions.

Seek to identify-and reinforce-those practices and programs currently in place.

Reinforce behaviors that create a climate of inclusion, supporting and preserving the dignity and worth of all members.

Continue to promote and maintain a healthy human relations climate. This can be done by ensuring all members in the unit understand their roles and responsibilities.

Share positive results to enhance members' commitment to the organization and its mission.

Consider utilizing training aids to further provide awareness and knowledge regarding key factors.

It is important to note that some or all of the three lowest averages may actually be comparable to your respective Service averages, and not necessarily represent a negative finding. If any of these averages appear appreciably lower than your Service average, they should be treated as an organizational concern. In cases where low averages, compare the demographic subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions are more obvious among specific groups.

After identifying the specific climate factors with low averages and those demographic subgroups that harbor negative perceptions regarding them, use these findings to plan follow-on assessment efforts, including focus groups, interviews, and written record reviews. Conducting focus groups and interviews can help determine the source and extent of specific perceptions.

Develop an action plan and socialize the plan with members. Set a timeline for the action items designed to address each specific validated concern, and provide timely feedback on progress accomplishing them. This will demonstrate your willingness to listen to your subordinates, and take action to improve conditions when possible.

We trust these recommendations for interpretation will prove useful. DEOMI believes the DEOCS can help commanders improve the readiness within their commands. To make best use of this tool, DEOMI provides tools and products designed to address the mission impacting issues that were identified during the climate assessment process.

I. Executive Summary

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard [(AKNG)]." The request highlighted concerns over reports of sexual assault and allegations of a hostile work environment within the AKNG. The Governor's request also sought an overall assessment of the AKNG's command structure and its responses in cases of sexual assault that were otherwise referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition.

Synopsis

The National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations conducted a statewide assessment into the Alaska National Guard and made findings and recommendations in the areas of sexual assault, EEO/EO matters, coordination with local law enforcement, Alaska National Guard member misconduct, command climate and the administration of justice.

A. Findings

- The AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well-organized, but victims do not trust the system due to an overall lack of confidence in the command;

- The AKNG leadership has failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program;

- The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate coordination with local law enforcement regarding cases of misconduct committed by members of the AKNG;

- There were several instances of fraud committed by AKNG members and leadership at the facilities level, but that this fraudulent activity did not have an impact on the reporting of sexual assault. Examples of fraud included embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and misuse of government equipment for personal gain. On 27 Augu into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNGst 2014, Governor Parnell requested that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- Actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding trust and confidence in AKNG leadership; and

- The AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct.

B. Recommendations

- The NGB-JA/OCI Team provided seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the state;

- The Team provided five separate recommendations to improve the State Equal Employment Opportunity program;

- The Team recommends that allegations of misconduct under investigation by law enforcement be tracked by the AKNG Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer;

- The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a separate assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- The Team recommends that all levels of command in the AKNG reevaluate their approach to leading soldiers in a positive manner and provided seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's visit and through the climate survey; and

- The Team identified nine areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the administration of justice within the state.

II. Background

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard." In accordance with CNGBM 0400.01, the Chief Counsel for the National Guard Bureau (NGB) appointed an NGB-JA/OCI Assessment Team, hereinafter referred to as "the Team." The assessment was conducted from 19 March 2014 until 13 June 2014.

On or about 19 March 2014, members of the Team travelled to Anchorage, Alaska to meet with Governor Parnell and obtain his specific guidance on the scope of the assessment. Governor Parnell requested an independent look at the AKNG's training, reporting, investigating, and case disposition practices in the areas of sexual assault, hostile work environment (e.g., sexual harassment), and fraud. Additionally, the Governor requested that the Team review matters that were referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition but never prosecuted and assess the current culture, policies, and personnel practices of the AKNG (Army and Air) to determine their effect on the current command climate.

The Team developed an action plan which included: conducting a statewide command climate survey; collecting identified data requirements; conducting on-site interviews at all major AKNG locations; interviewing all AKNG senior leaders, to include the Adjutant General (TAG), the Assistant Adjutant General for both the Air and Army National Guard, and the Director of the Joint Staff; and coordinating with Army Criminal Investigation Division (CID) and local Alaskan law enforcement officials.

From 1 April through 1 June 2014, a command climate survey was conducted using a DoD-approved survey tool through the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute. The Team conducted most of the interviews and reviewed data provided during the timeframe of 28 April through 12 June 2014.

The Team collected volumes of data and travelled over 1,000 miles, visiting Ft. Greely, Eielson Air Force Base (AFB), Clear Air Force Station (AFS), and Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson (JBER). The Team also conducted over 185 personal interviews. Those interviewed included current, former, and retired members of the Alaska Army and Air National Guard; members of the active duty U.S. Air Force; part-time and full-time civilian AKNG employees; civilian state military forces leaders; local, state and federal civilian law enforcement officials; and U.S. Army Alaska (USARAK) Criminal Investigation Division (CID) officials.

The Team reviewed all allegations and issues identified in the initial request for assistance, as well as subsequent allegations identified through various means including e-mail communications, federal and state congressional submissions, anonymous correspondence, recent media reports, and on-site interviews.[1]

The Team's directive and goal was not to re-investigate previous allegations of sexual assault, hostile work environment, fraud or other misconduct, but rather to assess the instances of misconduct as a whole, identifying common themes among behavior that was already known to have occurred, further evaluating how those incidents were handled by the command. The Team did this by reviewing each allegation of misconduct and the corresponding investigation through analysis of data provided by the AKNG in response to the Team's data request (Tab C) and thru personal interviews conducted by the Team. In this way, each of the Governor's requests is individually addressed within this report.

[1] The Team reviewed all documentation regarding the foregoing matters, to include assessing the administrative actions taken and the current status of the individuals involved. In some cases, the Team re-interviewed witnesses to collect additional evidence or to clarify prior statements. During the course of these interviews, additional and insightful information regarding the organization, its operating standards, and unique challenges became apparent. In order to limit the scope of the assessment to the directed matters, however, the team explored only those additional allegations that either clarified the initial action of the command or provided factual information not previously identified during the initial inquiry.

III. Action Plan

The Team developed the following action plan to address each of the Governor's area of concern: Sexual Assault; Hostile Work Environment; Fraud, Coordination with Law Enforcement; Misconduct; and Command Climate. Each is addressed more fully below.

A. Sexual Assault

In response to the allegations of sexual assault, the Team focused on four areas: review of reported allegations of sexual assault and the actions taken regarding those reports; interviews with victims of the reported sexual assaults, which included both unrestricted and restricted reports[2]; review of AKNG sexual assault policies, practices, training and command emphasis; and review of the results of the NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding sexual assault).

The AKNG provided a matrix of all reported incidents of sexual assault since the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program was initiated in 2006. There were 37 reports of sexual assault; of those, 17 were unrestricted and eight identified sexual assault perpetrators. Some of the allegations reported were investigated by the AKNG; however, most of the allegations involved civilian perpetrators and were referred to AK local law enforcement officials for investigation.

B. Hostile Work Environment

A hostile work environment occurs when there is discriminatory or harassing behavior that is so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[3] Consistent with the Governor's request, the Team focused on three areas: review of all allegations of hostile work environment, including a review of all Equal Employment Opportunity/Equal Opportunity (EEO/EO) complaints and the action taken; interviews with formal complainants and prospective complainants; and the results of the OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding EEO/EO matters).

The Team requested a roster of all EEO/EO complaints going back 10 years; however, there was no clear record-keeping system available that would provide that information.[4] The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM) provided details regarding three active complaints currently being addressed within AKNG units. Additional concerns and complaints were discovered by the Team during the course of the assessment phase and referred to the SEEM or discussed with responsible commanders, as appropriate with the concurrence of the disclosing interviewees. Finally, information regarding the EEO/EO program was provided in the OCI climate survey.

C. Fraud

In response to allegations of fraudulent activities in the AKNG, the Team focused on three areas: review of reported incidents of fraudulent activities and the action taken regarding such reports; interviews with commanders, investigating officers, internal review officials, and the office of the USPFO; and review of internal audits conducted by the AKNG.

The Team reviewed several minor reported incidents of inappropriate use of the Government Purchase Card, each of which was administratively handled through a letter of reprimand/admonishment. There were two high-profile fraud incidents: one incident involved a senior AKNG officer who misused government equipment for personal use, and the another incident involved a senior AKNG enlisted member who re-directed donated funds for personal gain. While each incident was investigated by agencies outside the AKNG, the Team interviewed several personnel involved in those investigations as well as members within the AKNG during the time period when the fraudulent activity occurred. During the course of these interviews, several questions regarding the lawful use of federal funds by state and federal program managers were raised so the Team expanded the scope of fraud to include a review of the AKNG facilities program.

D. Coordination with Law Enforcement

In response to questions regarding the coordination between the AKNG and local law enforcement, the Team focused on three areas: a review of all written agreements between the AKNG and AK law enforcement organizations from 2004-2014; a review of the list of all reported misconduct made by or to law enforcement or any Military Criminal Investigative Organizations (MCIO) involving AKNG full-time and part-time military personnel over the past 10 years; and interviews with AKNG leaders and local law enforcement personnel.

In most cases, AKNG records only went back to approximately 2009-2010, and there was no standardization across lower-level commands within the AKNG with regard to misconduct reporting and tracking. The AKNG provided information regarding 64 cases of misconduct that was reported to local law enforcement over the last 10 years; of those, 56 resulted in disciplinary action. Interviews with local law enforcement officials provided the most detailed information regarding joint efforts in coordination.

E. Misconduct in the AKNG

To assess the AKNG leadership's handling of the reports of misconduct, the Team reviewed a list of all incidents of misconduct that were tracked at the unit level as well as paper and digital copies of all AKNG command policies and procedures from 2004 to 2014 pertaining but not limited to sexual assault and harassment, fraternization, DUI, improper use of government equipment, recruiting and retention, and ethical standards of conduct.

The AKNG provided 494 reports of misconduct over the past 10 years.[5] The Team reviewed the files and administrative actions taken in response to the reported misconduct, and it conducted interviews with individuals involved in several of the incidents where administrative action followed.

[5] This number includes the 46 cases that were reported to local law enforcement referenced above and 24 EO cases. Of the total number, 115 cases were designated as general misconduct, 3 were cases of fraud, 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, and 62 were alcohol-related incidents.

F. Command Climate

The Team coordinated with the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute (DEOMI) to initiate an NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey targeted at soliciting feedback from all members of the AKNG, to include part-time, full-time support, and federalized members. The survey directly solicited feedback from within the AKNG regarding their leaders' ability to lead, confidence in their leadership, favoritism and respect. Additionally, the team requested copies of any command climate surveys conducted by the AKNG over the preceding five years, as well as all NGB Safety Assessments and NGB Staff Assistance Visit (SAV) reports.

During the period of 1 April to 1 June 2014, approximately 25% of the AKNG participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The results of the survey, detailed in Appendix A, confirmed the issues identified by the Team during their onsite interviews and reiterated issues that had been raised in the 22 previous surveys conducted by the AKNG.

IV. Analysis

Pursuant to its appointment memorandum, the Team focused their efforts primarily on allegations identified in the Action Plan. The Team interviewed over 185 witnesses and reviewed volumes of documents in order to establish an understanding of how each of these areas were managed and addressed within the AKNG, and to note deficiencies, identify any common themes; and, where appropriate, make specific remedial recommendations. The Team's findings and recommendations are detailed in Sections VI through IX below.

The Team identified persistent negative themes in the areas of administration and management of legal support and a general lack of confidence and trust in the AKNG leadership at various levels.

The Team concluded that the lack of confidence relating to both the legal support provided to the command and the lack of trust in the AKNG leadership is impeding the organization from reaching its full potential, and this persistent negative theme is contributing to the perception that the AKNG leadership is not addressing the concerns of sexual assault victims.

A. Analysis of Sexual Assault

The Team conducted extensive interviews with victims who had reported sexual assaults, victim advocates, other current and former service members who supported those victims, and the commanders who implement the DoD Sexual Assault and Prevention Response program within their organizations. The Team reviewed the results of its command climate survey, wherein all participants were asked specific questions regarding sexual assault and sexual assault reporting, and the Team concluded there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011. These issues included poor execution, oversight, and management, as well as suspected confidentiality breaches.

The Team concluded that there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011.

1. Sexual Assault Program Management

Prior to 2012, the AKNG Joint Force Headquarters Sexual Assault Response Coordinator was a contract employee. This was consistent across the lower 48 states as the National Guard Joint Forces Headquarters (NG JFHQ) manning requirements did not initially include a requirement for a Title 32, Non-Dual Status Technician to serve as the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Like programs in other states, however, the AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program was, in fact, overseen by a military member assigned to Family Programs within the AKNG personnel section (J1).

The contract employee serving as the AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator had been appropriately certified through the National Guard Bureau's training in the management of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. According to witnesses and records that were reviewed, she operated independently within the AKNG J1 with little actual supervision and without adequate oversight. The Team learned that records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. As a result, victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner as required by DoD Policy.[6]

Prior to 2012 records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. Victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner.

The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contract was managed by the AKNG J1 Director of Family Programs, who, at that time, was not trained in the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. During the Team's interview with the Director, she acknowledged being unaware of the contractor's deficiencies and confirmed that she relied on the expertise of the contractor to inform her of the program's requirements and any deficiencies. As a result, the magnitude of the record-keeping problem in the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program did not surface until the contractor left the position.

A Title 32, non-dual-status technician position was created in 2011. This resulted in the hiring of a trained and qualified Sexual Assault Response Coordinator who was capable of reshaping the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program over the past three years. The Team found the current program to be effective, and the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator to be well-organized, responsive to victims, well-respected, and actively engaged with the AKNG leadership. Her monthly Sexual Assault Review Board meeting is regularly attended by all senior leaders (to include the TAG and the Assistant Adjutants General Air and Army); thereby ensuring these senior leaders are aware of the current program needs and the status of victim's cases. Interviews with victims that have been in contact with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator confirmed they were generally satisfied with the support she has provided.

Prior program deficiencies have had a lingering effect, however. The Team noted that, when discussing the program with other first responders (Judge Advocates and Chaplains), they stated they would not recommend that sexual assault victims report their assault to the AKNG's Victim Advocates, citing prior program deficiencies as the primary reason.

The Team identified additional concerns from an organizational standpoint. Several witnesses stated that, in the case of the Air National Guard, the Victim Advocate position is an additional duty for the executive officer, who sits within the very command headquarters suite that many reporting victims want to avoid. The location of this position is creating the unfounded perception among airmen that the executive officers are unable to provide confidential assistance, despite the officers' availability by phone or email to arrange a meeting elsewhere. This issue was unique to the Air National Guard as the Army National Guard Victim Advocates are more distributed throughout the force and within the ranks.

The OCI command climate survey substantiated that AKNG service members believed they were working in an environment that was safe from sexual assault and that they would receive support from the chain of command and the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, a significant number of respondents perceived substantial barriers to reporting sexual assault, reflecting a possible continuing lack of trust within the command. Interviews with service members revealed that the positive changes in the management of the program since 2011 are not widely known, at least not as well-known as the challenges that existed in the program prior to 2011.

2. Victim Confidentiality

Most of the individuals interviewed stated that they knew who their Victim Advocate was and understood the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; nonetheless, most individuals also indicated that they would not report a sexual assault due to concerns over confidentiality. The Team noted that prior to 2012 there had been instances wherein commanders either obtained the names of victims who made restricted reports of sexual assault or distilled that same information from the "sanitized" reports that were made in contradiction to DoD policy.[7] Additionally, victims reported that in some cases they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making their restricted reports. Such conduct is in violation of DoD policy.

Some victims reported that they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making restricted sexual assault reports.

Several individuals interviewed expressed concern with reporting a sexual assault, questioning the value of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Several senior AKNG service members interviewed expressed the sentiment that they could not afford to be seen as "a victim" or "weak" in their senior leaders' eyes and therefore would not report. Such sentiment creates the perception that the program is unnecessary, sending the wrong message to commanders, which in turn impacts reporting and assistance for victims.

Confidentiality continues to remain a challenge for the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program.

During the on-site assessment, a victim of sexual assault reported to the Team that she had overheard a fellow service member discussing the details of her own assault while at work. Though she was not individually identified and the individual who was reportedly discussing the information likely did not know her identity as the victim, she was understandably disturbed by the casual manner in which her supposedly confidential information was being maintained and openly discussed.

3. Sexual Assault Case Disposition

The team reviewed 37 cases of sexual assault: 15 were either filed as restricted reports or were not investigated at the request of the victim; 20 were investigated by local law enforcement; and 2 were investigated by MCIOs[8]. Of the 20 investigated by local law enforcement, 4 were still open at the time of the Team's assessment and 16 were closed without further investigations. Many of the 16 closed cases involved the use of alcohol, delayed reporting, or had other evidentiary challenges. As a result, these cases were not prosecuted by local authorities.

Notwithstanding the challenges of criminal prosecution, military commanders have administrative tools available to maintain good order and discipline within military units. Therefore, it is appropriate for commanders to consider administrative action following or pending a decision by local authorities to prosecute a sexual assault case. The Team reviewed only one case where the AKNG leadership decided to pursue administrative action against a perpetrator notwithstanding local law enforcement's decision not to prosecute.

The AKNG leadership from 2009-2013 initiated numerous internal administrative investigations into reported sexual assaults. The Team noted, however, that many of these investigations were led by individuals who lacked the specialized training to conduct sexual assault investigations. As a result, the AKNG administrative investigations were not adequately conducted in some cases.[9]

The AKNG's recent efforts to properly investigate and hold offenders accountable for sexual assaults through coordination with law enforcement and OCI complies with DoD guidance on Sexual Assault Prevention and Response.

[8] MCIOs initially investigated 5 allegations however 3 were referred to local law enforcement once due to jurisdictional issues. Of the 2 cases remaining 1 case went to Court Martial and resulted in acquittal, the other was closed due to insufficiency of evidence.
[9] To address the specific concern that state National Guards lacked sufficient investigative resources, the NGB established the NGB Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in 2012.

Several investigations conducted in the AKNG since 2013 were conducted either by OCI [10] or by an officer certified to investigate on OCI's behalf while serving in a state status. Several of these cases were proceeding toward administrative action at the time of the Team's assessment.

Sexual assault investigations within the National Guard require specialized training due to the complex jurisdictional issues presented. Likewise, state codes typically vary from the DoD definition of sexual assault. Accordingly, not all allegations meeting the military's definition of sexual assault will be investigated by local law enforcement or prosecuted under state law.[11] A detailed discussion of these jurisdictional issues is provided at Appendix C.

B. Analysis of EEO/EO Matters

The Governor requested that the assessment address behavior that may have created "a hostile environment and culture within portions of the AKNG." To assess whether a work environment is "hostile," the Team had to evaluate whether discriminatory and harassing behavior existed and, if founded, whether such behavior was so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[12]

To determine whether a hostile work environment existed, the Team reviewed formal and informal EEO/EO complaints. The data request revealed an incomplete record of complaints regarding hostile work environment, discrimination and sexual harassment.[13] Accordingly, most of the information

[10] Pursuant to CNGBN 0400.01, command investigative options are limited to military criminal investigative organizations, local law enforcement, or the NGB Office of Complex Investigations.

[12] NG PAM 600-22, paragraph 5-6d, provides that when conducting an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment, investigators must document whether or not the harassment was quid pro quo (submission to such conduct is made explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment) or a hostile environment (conduct unreasonably interfering with an individual's job performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, offensive working environment). See also Burlington v. Ellerth, 118 S. Ct. 2257 (1998).

[13] Notwithstanding, the Team did not identify any instances leading to a conclusion of an affirmative withholding of information had occurred, just a general lack of oversight and management.

reviewed by the Team was collected during interviews with the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the unit Equal Opportunity Advisors (EOAs), individual witnesses, and OCI survey responses. The AKNG EEO/EO Office did not maintain a database to track EEO/EO complaints; however, the AKNG SEEM reported there were three known EO complaints. This is inconsistent with the 200 instances identified in the OCI command climate survey, of which 35 were reported to someone within the service member's organization.[14] Additionally, the Team notes that these survey results were only reflective of the 25% of the AKNG who both participated in the survey and responded to questions regarding discrimination and harassment in the workplace, thus indicating that the "real" number was likely higher.

The Team interviewed several individuals who stated that they were subjected to a hostile work environment characterized by inappropriate sexual comments and disparate treatment based on ethnic/national origin. These witnesses stated during interviews that they were treated disparately and had elevated their concerns through their chain of command without successful resolution. A few stated they have lost faith in their leadership's ability to do the right thing. Many referenced the lack of disciplinary action taken by leadership against members who were known to have engaged in fraternization or inappropriate conduct. A further analysis into the specific areas of sexual harassment, disparate treatment, and reprisal/retaliation is included below.

1. Sexual Harassment

Sexual Harassment occurs when there are unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or other inappropriate verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature. [15] The Team learned of several examples of inappropriate

[14] See pages 10-11 of both the AKARNG and AKANG OCI Climate Surveys.

[15] Sexual Harassment is defined by National Guard policy as "a form of gender discrimination that involves unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when: (1) Submission to or rejection of such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of a person's job, pay, or career; or (2) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting that person; or (3) Such conduct interferes with an individual's performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment. Any person in a supervisory or command position who uses or condones implicit or explicit sexual behavior to control, influence, or affect the career, pay, or job of a military member or civilian employee is engaging in sexual harassment. Similarly, any military member or civilian employee who makes deliberate or repeated unwelcome verbal comments, gestures, or physical contact of a conduct of a sexual nature in its interviews with AKNG personnel, including a report of pictures of male genitalia drawn inside aircraft panels at an ANG Wing, flight instructors having sex with flight students, and senior leaders sending harassing and inappropriate text messages. Witnesses reported that AKNG internal inquiries into their complaints failed to substantiate the harassing behavior and as a result no action was taken. Indeed the information provided by the ANG Wings did not reflect that any administrative action occurred as a result of the complaints made.

The Team also learned that there were recent allegations of sexual harassment that had not been referred to EEO/EO; rather, the AKNG leadership was aware of these allegations, which were handled through internal investigation. Leaders should be directly involved in the EEO/EO program and they should collaborate with EEO/EO personnel to provide appropriate lawful recourse for both the complainant and the subject of the complaint. In several instances leaders attempted resolution without the assistance of EEO/EO personnel, this is not optimal. Service members interviewed by the Team perceived leadership efforts at internal resolution as an attempt to cover up sexual harassment allegations. This perception was reiterated in the OCI climate survey, which highlighted fear of reprisal and lack of support from the chain of command as the primary barriers to reporting discrimination.

2. Disparate Treatment

Disparate Treatment refers to intentional treatment of a person that is different than that provided to others based on one or more protected factors.[16] A large number (50+) of Puerto Rican Army National Guard members moved from Puerto Rico to Alaska to supplement the AKNG Military Police unit at Ft. Greely, AK. Several members discussed disparate treatment towards the Spanish-speaking members of this unit. They related that their leadership told Puerto Rican soldiers that they were not allowed to speak Spanish in the "operational" area, which some consider the entire installation. Under Army Policy, commanders may not require the use of English for personal sexual nature is also engaging in sexual harassment." NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

communications that are unrelated to military functions.[17] Command emphasis on the language issue has created a negative environment within the remote location, where members report that some military spouses are even posting derogatory comments about Spanish speaking spouses on social media sites.

There were are also concerns raised about providing medical care for families of service members assigned to Ft. Greely, specifically those with spouses from Puerto Rico. While medical care was a hot topic across the installation, either a lack of information or a lack of command attention created a rift among the former Puerto Rico National Guard members who believed they were receiving diminished medical support for their families because of their national origin. Several individuals interviewed at Ft. Greely stated they were required to provide medical documentation that their families are healthy due to the remoteness of the location, and that these documents were maintained in their personnel files which would impact their tour continuation.[18] They believed this requirement was unique to them based on their national origin, noting that local members of the AKNG were not required to file similar documentation. When the Team inquired with the S1 personnel at Ft Greely about medical documentation, they did not receive a clear response. The S1 himself was confused about the requirement.

Follow-up conversations with the AKNG J1, at JBER, clarified that Army policy requires service members to identify any special needs for family members for which adequate medical care may not be available at certain remote sites. [19] Although this conflicted with the broad requirement implemented at Ft Greely, the Team concluded that the practice was not intended to target certain categories of individuals and may be remedied through additional training.

[17] AR 600-20, paragraph 4-13, provides: "English is the operational language of the Army. Soldiers must maintain sufficient proficiency in English to perform their military duties. Their operational communication must be understood by everyone who has an official need to know their content, and, therefore, must normally be in English. However, commanders may not require Soldiers to use English unless such use is clearly necessary and proper for the performance of military functions."

3. Reprisal/Retaliation

Reprisal occurs when leaders take or threaten to take unfavorable action or withhold favorable action against a military member for making a protected statement, participating in a protected activity, or preparing a protected disclosure.

In order to prevent reprisal/retaliation from occurring, EEO/EO counselors and commanders are required by NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3 to provide the complainant and witnesses with a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan. This plan outlines what constitutes reprisal, covers the Military Whistleblower Protection Act, and outlines the possible consequences for a reprisal action.[20] The plan is to be completed with the assistance of EO professionals and given to the complainant and witnesses involved in EO cases. If used in accordance with regulations, the Reprisal Prevention Plan could eliminate the perception of retaliation and encourage members to come forward with their concerns.

AKNG commanders were not developing a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan

The Team was informed by AKNG EEO/EO personnel that commanders were not completing these plans or advising witnesses of their concern regarding reprisal/retaliation with every new reported complaint. This fact may explain why the OCI survey revealed that one of the top reasons personnel do not report incidents of harassment/discrimination is due to fear of reprisal/retaliation.

[20] Reprisal is defined as by National Guard policy as "taking (or threatening to take) an unfavorable personnel action, or withholding (or threatening to withhold) a favorable personnel action for having engaged in a protected equal opportunity activity…" NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

4. EEO/EO Program Management

The AKNG SEEM is performing two roles within the AKNG Human Resources Office (HRO) – AGR Staffing Specialist and Equal Employment Manager. She shares her office with another officer and has no privacy. She does not directly report to the TAG; rather, she reports issues to the Chief of Human Resources, who accompanies her on all briefings regarding EEO/EO matters provided to the TAG. The AKNG SEEM does not perform site visits on a regular basis to the geographically-separated facilities (i.e., Ft Greely, 168th ARW or Clear AFS). Finally, the Team noted that the AKNG SEEM was behind in completing a mandatory EEO report,[21] which was due in March 2014.

The Team found the failure to track EEO/EO complaints and/or complete the regulatory reporting requirements may be perceived to demonstrate a lack of commitment to the EEO/EO program.

The Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG) Equal Opportunity Program is regulated by NGR 600-21, which requires a Human Resource Equal Opportunity Officer (HR/EO) at the JFHQ level and an Equal Opportunity Advisor (EOA) at every O-6 level of command; these individuals attend mandatory training at DEOMI. The AKARNG has had three different HR/EO's assigned in the past three years; the current individual is deployed for one year and has not been to DEOMI training. Per the aforementioned guidance, the AKARNG should have five trained EOAs; however, they currently have three EOAs, one of whom is leaving the service and one is currently deployed. This creates a problem for individuals who seek assistance with complaints of discrimination and for commanders trying to implement an effective program. Commanders simply cannot meet the mandatory EEO/EO training requirements without trained EOAs.

The Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG) Equal Opportunity Program is directed by ANGI 36-7. The Team interviewed an ANG Wing Military Equal Opportunity Officer (MEO) and EO NCOIC. Three informal reports were pending at the time of the Team's assessment. The Team learned that there were hostile climate issues within the AKANG, but that few people had come forward to file complaints. Interviews with members of both Wings reported a general pattern of inappropriate behavior that was not being addressed by the leadership. Allegations included the public display of nude pictures, sexual innuendo and inappropriate touching occurring within the workplace.

While funding to certify ARNG and ANG EEO/EO representatives through DEOMI or NGB-EO was available, overall support for the program was not evident to the Team at the various echelons of command. Several individuals interviewed expressed concern that the EEO/EO program is getting lost in the mix of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and Inspector General (IG) sensing sessions that were initiated by the AKNG at the request of the TAG to focus on climate issues (EO and SAPR were not participants in the IG sessions). They further believed that personnel are missing the underlying message regarding appropriate conduct in a professional environment.

Additionally witnesses stated that EEO/EO issues brought out during sensing sessions with the TAG and Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army are not forwarded to the AKNG SEEM for resolution; and that the SEEM does not review the command climate surveys being conducted and, as a consequence, cannot provide guidance to AKNG leadership on possible solutions to issues raised within these surveys.

C. Analysis of Fraud

The Team reviewed reported incidents of fraud that had occurred over the past 10 years. Most of the incidents involved the improper use of the government travel or purchase card. One incident involved the embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and another incident involved the misconduct of a senior officer who misused federal equipment and personnel for his own personal gain. In each instance the Team noted that there was a lack of oversight in the AKNG to prevent and detect fraud when it occurred.

The Team learned of recent concerns over program expenditures related to personnel and facilities that became the focus of a July 2013 internal review audit, which was scheduled at the request of the United States Property and Fiscal Officer (USPFO).[22] The audit reviewed the operational controls used to administer the federal operations and maintenance agreement and found that those controls were lacking.[23]

The audit recommended that the AKNG establish additional compensating controls and realign internal controls to increase federal oversight and control.[24] The audit also found that the Alaska Division of Military & Veterans Affairs (DMVA) altered the federal internal controls making AKNG operations reliant on DMVA's internal control system, which violated federal regulatory requirements.[25]

The internal review found that while the claims for reimbursement under the Cooperative Agreement were valid, the agreement lacked adequate internal controls.

Following the audit Alaska improved their system of accounting for the work performed.[26] However, the oversight of the federal program managers and the base civil engineers continues to be an issue. The Team was provided with a number of examples where program oversight was lacking due to the supervisory relationship

Title 32, United States Code, therefore established the position known as the United State Property & Fiscal Officer (USPFO), which can be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds within the National Guard of a particular state

[23] Under a standard Facilities Operations and Maintenance Activities appendix, the state employees are paid to perform identified jobs and their pay is covered under a cost share relationship between federal and state authorities, and the employees take technical direction from Federal Program Managers for management of priorities, time, and funding accountability. According to the audit, in AK the state employees are managed through a consolidated labor pool. In theory this arrangement could result in cost savings. However, it relies on accurate accounting mechanisms and oversight to ensure that work is being performed and reimbursed which the audit found to be insufficient. The audit noted that the Federal Program Manager was responsible for an activity over which he had limited control noting, "The Federal Program Manager's role has been diminished to an extent that reasonable assurance may not be determined by the Federal Program Manager without additional compensating controls being implemented." AK ANG Audit FY13.

[24] The DMVA (State of Alaska) now submits a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that shows how personnel costs are being charged and access to the real-time payroll database. This allows the Base Civil Engineer (BCE) and Facilities manager the ability to review input to ensure that personnel are not being charged to other accounts for the same time or service.

between state and federal employees and the centralized employment pool. Examples included the scheduling of leave without coordinating with the base civil engineer which interfered with federal project accomplishment through operational delay. Additionally, in one instance a state employee attempted to lease federal property to a state agency without proper federal coordination. The matter was reported to the federal program manager just in time for them to intervene, but the incident exemplified the lack of oversight in this area. Increased oversight and adequate internal controls are essential to the detection and prevention of fraud in the future.

D. Analysis of Coordination with Law Enforcement

The Team noted the AKNG did not track matters referred to local law enforcement for disposition. When information regarding referred matters was requested by the Team, the information had to be pulled together by personnel familiar with the allegations, or via connections to local law enforcement entities. The resulting civilian dispositions of the referred actions were varied. In some cases no formal charges were made and the conduct which gave rise to the investigation went unaddressed. Had these cases been tracked and the information regarding the misconduct been received by the command, the leadership would have been able to monitor the disposition of the alleged misconduct by local law enforcement and may have been able to take more timely appropriate disciplinary action where a nexus between the conduct and military good order and discipline existed.

The Team met with federal and state local law enforcement personnel in Anchorage to discuss misconduct within the AKNG. Additionally, the Team spoke telephonically with state law enforcement investigators throughout the state.

Improved lines of communication with law enforcement will improve good order and discipline within the AKNG

The Anchorage Police noted they do not inquire whether or not the subject of an investigation is a member of the AKNG as a matter of course, and while service members are nominally required to report to their command if they are arrested, there is no mechanism in place that would ensure this actually occurs. As a result, commanders may be unaware of misconduct committed by some service members outside of military installations.

The Team discussed with the AK law enforcement personnel the possibility of annotating when military personnel are investigated. It was determined that an additional data field could be added to the standard AK police report, although such action would be a change in their normal business practice.

The Team met with Army CID to discuss prior AKNG allegations that they had investigated. These included investigations of sexual assault, drug sales and trafficking of federal weapons, all of which were closed due to lack of sufficient evidence. Though significant numbers of AKNG personnel in Anchorage perform duties on a federal installation, there is little coordination or information sharing between the Active Component military and the AKNG.

The Team noted that several of the service members interviewed were under investigation by law enforcement, and at least one was serving probation while serving in an active duty status. This creates a perception that the AKNG leadership is either unaware or unconcerned about misconduct that is occurring in the ranks. Several witnesses perceived that while leadership was aware of misconduct, they have allowed members to serve because the operational mission is more important than the quality of the force or because of the wrongdoer's personal connections to the leadership.

E. Analysis of AKNG Misconduct

To assess misconduct within the AKNG, the Team requested copies of all reported misconduct and subsequent disposition (administrative and criminal) for the AKNG full-time and part-time personnel over the past 10 years. In analyzing the information provided by the AKNG, there were 494 reports of misconduct, of which 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, 62 cases were alcohol-related violations (such as DUI), 37 cases involved sexual assault (17 were unrestricted), 64 cases were reported as civilian criminal misconduct (such as assault), 15 cases were designated as general misconduct, 24 cases were EO-related, 3 cases involved fraud, and 27 other cases involved military misconduct. The Team noted there was a lack of consistency in the tracking of various cases that are reported to the command; there is also a lack of consistent punishment for like offenses.

With regard to matters that primarily involved the AKARNG, most allegations of misconduct were investigated pursuant to Army Regulation 15-6. Allegations involving AKANG members were typically investigated by Commander-Directed Investigations (CDI) pursuant to the SAF IG CDI Guide.[27] With the exception of the alleged embezzlement of funds from the AKNG family programs fund in 2011, specific allegations of fraud were internally reviewed. While several instances of misconduct were investigated by the applicable MCIO or local law enforcement, there was little evidence that the AKNG maintained situational awareness of these matters. At the time of the Team's assessment, some matters were still being reviewed by local law enforcement and/or the Federal Bureau of Investigation and, therefore, were not the subject of substantive review by the Team.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the AKNG Recruiting and Retention Command. Several command directed investigations initiated in 2012 found that, during the time period of 2008-2009, several non-commissioned officers within this command were engaged in misuse of government vehicles, fraud, adultery, inappropriate relationships and sexual assault. Several of these cases are pending administrative action.

The Team's interviews conducted with the FBI, CID and local law enforcement revealed that the Recruiting and Retention Command had been the target of multiple investigations for crimes such as weapons smuggling, rape, and drug trafficking; however, none of these investigations resulted in prosecution of the crimes under investigation due to jurisdictional issues or lack of evidence.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the Recruiting and Retention Command 2008-2009. Some of this misconduct is now the subject of administrative action.

The Team learned that during the time period investigated, the Recruiting and Retention Command commander reported directly to the AK TAG. This was a deviation from the normal reporting chain of AKNG units in comparison to both his predecessor and successor in command. This arrangement may not be optimal.

Recruiting and retention is strongly emphasized in the AKNG. Successful leaders are measured by their ability to both recruit and retain personnel. In some cases within the AKANG, promotions were tied to recruiting and retention numbers (e.g., unit vacancy promotion could not be utilized unless the Wing was at 95% strength). Additionally, high operational tempo requires the availability of all hands to support ongoing operations in AK. This created a perception that quantity was valued over quality, creating a disincentive to remove problem personnel who were otherwise operationally capable employees. Some Army and Air National Guard witnesses testified that when they approached the leadership regarding misconduct, they were specifically told to stand down.

The Recruiting and Retention commander was reported to be the TAG's friend and neighbor, creating a perception that this commander was invulnerable. This led to questions of the TAG's potential bias and favoritism toward the commander. The Team did not investigate the validity of these allegations.[28]

The Team reviewed a prior investigation into allegations of inappropriate contact between a recruiting member and a student at local high school involved with the JROTC program. The Team conducted several interviews with high school administrators to evaluate these programs but found no known current deficiencies within the program. The school's administration appeared to be generally satisfied with the JROTC and recruiting programs and was unaware of any misconduct.

F. Command Climate Survey

The Team conducted a Command Climate Survey using DEOCS, a Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute based survey tool, from 1 April 2014 until 1 June 2014. The AKNG has a total of 3954 assigned personnel; Army - 1913 and Air - 2041. A total of 1011 personnel or 25.5% of the AKNG completed the OCI Command Climate Survey; Army – 541 at 28.2% and Air – 470 at 23.02%. The Team was told by numerous individuals that they had participated in multiple surveys during the past year and that they were suffering from survey fatigue. The Team learned that there were surveys from commanders, the IG, the NGB Diversity Office, major commands and various other organizations.

[28]According to AR 20-1 paragraph 7-1l, commanders or IGs must forward directly to the Department of the Army Inspector General's Investigations Division, through IG channels, any and all allegations of impropriety or misconduct (including criminal allegations) against senior officials—defined as general officers (including ARNGUS, USAR, and retired general officers), promotable colonels, and SES civilians—within 2 working days of receipt.

1. Climate Survey: Sexual Assault and Safe Environments

While the intent of command climate survey is to provide information to commanders that they can use to improve their command, the Team did not intend to share the results of the survey until after the Team's assessment was complete. However the survey was shared with the AKNG leadership as part of DEOMI's normal protocol. Individuals that participated should report any concerns of retaliation as a result of their candid participation in the survey to NGB-JA/OCI.

The OCI climate survey included several questions regarding Sexual Assault, perceptions of safety, and the overall Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Within the AKANG, a significant number of respondents perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, citing social retaliation, lack of confidence in the leadership and military justice, and lack of privacy which reflects a lack of trust within the command (See Table 1-1). Members of the AKARNG also perceived barriers to reporting sexual assaults, citing lack of confidence in their command and lack of confidence in the military justice system (See Tables 1 and 2).

When asked who can or cannot receive a restricted report of sexual assault, more than 25% of respondents answered that Criminal Investigators or Military Police were able to accept a Restricted Report, which is incorrect. This information indicates that, while the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program is being briefed to soldiers and airmen, there is still confusion when it comes too restricted vs. unrestricted reporting options.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

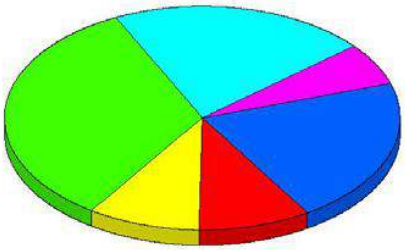
2. Climate Survey: Perceptions of Discrimination

The climate survey reflects 200 incidents of perceived discrimination or sexual harassment during the past twelve months.[29] Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy. Retaliation, gender-based (sexual) harassment and discrimination based on national origin were ranked high among the soldiers and airmen who responded. Of the AKARNG respondents faced with the question, "Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization," 37 said they had been retaliated against, 29 indicated that they had been harassed based on gender and 28 claimed discrimination based on race/national origin.

Respondents to the OCI Survey revealed 200 incidents of perceived discrimination and sexual harassment during the past twelve months. Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy.



Although the AKANG numbers were significantly lower overall, the same areas of concern were highlighted; 11 respondents stated they were harassed based on gender (sex), nine perceived retaliation, six respondents reported discrimination based on religion and five respondents reported discrimination based on race/national origin. A total of 26 men and 14 women responded that they were harassed based on gender. When queried "Did you report any of the incidents of discrimination to someone in your organization," 57 of those that responded did not report the incident to anyone; 35 members stated the barriers to their reporting included "Fear of reprisal," followed by 27 stating "Lack of support from command."

3. Trusting the Leadership

The survey included several areas designed to evaluate: Organizational Effectiveness, Trust in Leadership, and Unit Cohesion. Ten locally-developed questions were asked to evaluate the different echelons of AKNG command. The survey results indicate a lack of trust within the leadership of the AKNG. The organizational effectiveness factors chart reflects male officers and senior enlisted members of the Air Wings and Units fall behind the national average for trusting leadership to manage their organization. The same chart reflects a lack of trust of leadership at all levels of the AKNG.

Overall, the survey reveals a perception of lack of leadership integrity within all levels of command, to include handling of disciplinary actions, favoritism, and communication as well as issues regarding the results from various selection boards.

There is a perception that individuals who file complaints will be exposed to retaliation; 23% of individuals who participated in the survey stated they had been exposed to this behavior. When asked "What are the Barriers to Reporting Discrimination," 35% of respondents stated they would not report based on fear of reprisal. The Team interprets this to mean that soldiers and airmen are truly concerned by what they have witnessed in the organization.

35% of Survey respondents stated they would not report discrimination based on fear of reprisal.

The responses to the OCI Command Climate Survey were consistent with the comments made in the 22 other surveys provided to the Team for review. While these surveys were being conducted at the unit level, this indicates that the issues addressed above should not be new to the leadership. When properly utilized, climate surveys assist the commanders in identifying and reinforcing practices where they have succeeded in meeting or exceeding the national average. Issues where the unit falls below the national average, however, should be treated as an organizational concern that should be identified and addressed.

V. Additional Matters

Though not specifically identified in the Governor's request for an assessment, the Team identified the following additional matters in the AKNG that have contributed to the issues that gave rise to this inquiry.

A. Administration and Management of Justice

Most of the AKNG officers and senior enlisted members cited the inaccessibility of adequate military justice advice as a major barrier to effectively addressing misconduct, with the focus resting squarely on the Joint Force Headquarter Staff Judge Advocate (JFHQ SJA) who serves as the senior National Guard attorney and TAG's personal legal advisor for AKNG matters. Witnesses found her confusing and frustrating to deal with. They reported that questions provided to her were either left unanswered or the answers were so convoluted that they were of little value. While no one questioned her intelligence, personal commitment to the AKNG, or dedication to an ethical climate, they often questioned her legal advice; as a result, they reported to the Team that they and others avoided the JFHQ SJA altogether.

The JFHQ SJA had no apparent case tracking system. There was a handwritten log designed to track requests for legal review, but the legal staff did not routinely monitor its use. The log evidenced receipt, but no disposition, of just one administrative discharge action within the preceding four years. Additionally, the JFHQ had no visibility on the Army or Air National Guard legal matters, despite the fact that several of these matters would ultimately involve TAG action. Several witnesses described requests for legal review that often went unanswered. Additionally, the JFHQ SJA does not provide supervision or oversight over Army or Air matters.

The Team learned that the JFHQ SJA recently had coordinated with the State of Washington's SJA office to provide legal review of a number of AKNG Army investigations. Although impartiality was cited as the reason for the request, this further distanced the JFHQ SJA from the performance of actual legal support to AKNG units.

The AKNG operates over a very large geographic area and the limited number of JAs, both Army and Air, is not optimal. Increasing the number of JAs should lead to enhanced good order and discipline.

Notwithstanding the issues within the JFHQ SJA legal office, the quality of the Judge Advocate (JA) team is very high; recently, the AKARNG hired a full time, dual status military technician to provide daily legal support. This junior officer is currently managing several high visibility disciplinary boards and is very capable, yet significantly overworked. His military supervisor, the ARNG State SJA (a part-time guardsman), was taking appropriate steps to provide technical oversight; however, he is unable to provide hands-on assistance. In addition, the AKARNG does not participate in the Army National Guard's Trial Defense Counsel Program, and as a result relies on JAs from the lower 48 states to provide defense counsel when administrative action occurs.

The Team noted that, although there was an increase in misconduct that occurred at Ft Greely, there was no local part-time SJA assigned to assist the leadership at that location. While one JA was physically present on Ft Greely in his civilian capacity during weekdays, he commutes several hours to JBER on weekends to serve as a JA. Accordingly, legal support to Ft Greely, provided remotely, was less than optimal.

The Air National Guard JAs function as self-contained Wings at JBER (176 WG) and Eielson AFB (168 ARW). The 168 ARW maintains the Air National Guard component's only geographically separated unit (GSU) – the 213 SWS at Clear Air Force Station (AFS). Despite the fact that both Wings maintain robust 24/7/365 Title 10 and Title 32 operational missions, the Wings only have part-time JA positions authorized. There are two JAs at the 168 ARW neither of which currently practices law outside their Air National Guard positions; as such, they are generally accessible between drills. At the 176th WG the SJA is a highly-qualified but with his civilian employment he has little time between drills to tend to the Wing's operational and administrative demands. A new JA fills the deputy SJA position and, upon return from training, his presence should greatly assist in the swift processing of actions. Other then volume of work, there did not appear to be tracking problems or unique challenges for the JAs within the Air National Guard Wings.

The AKNG members serving in a Title 32 or State Active Duty Status are subject to state criminal law. For an analysis of Justice in the Military see Appendix C. Alaska's Code of Military Justice (ACMJ) expressly withholds jurisdiction for any crime that can be tried by civil authorities.[30] Therefore, "common law" crimes such as rape, indecent exposure/touching, and all other assaults cannot be criminally prosecuted under the ACMJ – but must instead be referred to civilian authorities. This leaves only inherently military offenses – such as insubordination, malingering, asleep at post, drunk on duty to be tried by military courts martial under the ACMJ. As a result, AKNG commanders instead rely upon administrative action to address misconduct.

Commanders currently have the ability to administratively separate, demote, and issue reprimands to enlisted members.[31] There are few administrative measures available to address officers involved in misconduct. The most common tool used in AK was the letter of reprimand with an occasional withdrawal of federal recognition as the only real and immediate consequence for officer misconduct.[32] The Team noted a general lack of understanding regarding the permanency of officially filed letters of reprimand; as a result, several letters that had been permanently filed were erroneously removed from officer's personnel files in contradiction to Army and National Guard policy.[33] Meanwhile other locally filed letters of reprimand with an annotated expiration date of 2-3 years should have been removed, but they were still in the service members' personnel files at the time of the assessment.

Administrative Action is the primary tool for commanders to restore order and discipline within their ranks but it must be swift and it must be lawful. As the processing of what appeared to the Team to be routine administrative matters lagged so did the confidence in the State Judge Advocate. The climate survey reflected this concern with 28% of the AKANG and 42% of the AKARNG respondents listing "lack of confidence in the military justice system" as a barrier to reporting sexual assault.

B. Ethical Misconduct

The Team reviewed multiple allegations of ethical misconduct by commissioned and noncommissioned officers in the AKNG. As senior leader ethics continue to be a predominant concern across the Department of

[32] See NGR 635-101, Officer Withdrawal of Federal Recognition.

[33] AR 600-37, paragraphs 7-1 and 7-2, provide that appeals and petitions for removal of unfavorable information be directed to the Department of the Army Suitability and Evaluation Board (DASEB) for action, States cannot unilaterally elect to remove information regardless of what the letter states or the officer giving the letter intended. The subject of the letter has the burden to provide evidence of a clear and convincing nature that the allegations are untrue or unjust, in whole or in part, thereby warranting removal. See also ARNG-HRZ Memorandum for Military personnel Management Officers of All States DTD 29 July 2013 Authority for Removal of IPERMs Documents (PPOM #13-028).

Defense, the Team examined leadership behavior and met with the Department of the Army Inspector General (DAIG) to review prior investigative findings as they related to the AKNG leadership.

The climate survey and interviews conducted by the Team highlighted a lack of trust of the leadership based on perceived instances of favoritism and bias by the senior leadership when responding to substantiated allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraud.

As one example, the DAIG substantiated violations of federal ethical standards by a former AKNG official. The DAIG found that, over a period of several years, the officer had inappropriately used government vehicles, to include helicopters, for personal use. The Team was also informed that this same official had improperly interrogated a victim of sexual assault and exercised bias in the administration of personnel matters. Many individuals interviewed by the Team blamed the current TAG for failing to take administrative action against the former AKNG official after learning of the DAIG findings against the officer.[34]

Substantiated complaints made against one officer resulted in no administrative action; the officer retired at his current rank and, upon retirement, was awarded the Legion of Merit.

The Team reviewed three voluminous investigations conducted at Ft. Greely regarding allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraternization.[35] At JBER the Team received information that multiple individuals within the JFHQ were engaged in inappropriate relationships, were involved in adulterous

[34] Available administrative remedies would have included but not be limited to Withdrawal of Federal Recognition or Grade Determination Board.

[35] Air Force Instruction 36-2909, paragraph 5, provides: "Unprofessional relationships between officers and enlisted members have a high potential for damaging morale and discipline and for compromising the standing of officers. Consequently, officers have an ethical and a legal obligation to avoid certain relationships and activities. Officers must not engage in any activity with an enlisted member that reasonably may prejudice good order and discipline, discredit the armed forces or compromise an officer's standing. The custom against fraternization in the Air Force extends beyond organizational and chain of command lines. In short, it extends to all officer/enlisted relationships." Army policy requires Commanders "seek to prevent inappropriate or unprofessional relationships through proper training and Leadership by example." AR 600-20, paragraph 4-14f.) Accordingly, commanders have the authority and the responsibility to maintain good order, discipline and morale within their units.

Interviews with senior leaders about these allegations revealed they were often aware of the allegations; however, the TAG believed that the AKNG was "not the morality police." Therefore, allegations of inappropriate conduct were not addressed until the conduct rose to the level that necessitated leadership involvement. Some individuals asserted that leadership only took action when individuals involved fell out of favor with the current leadership. The Team noted that, while commanders and other officers or senior enlisted members had been reprimanded for inappropriate relationships or behavior, they were typically allowed to retire at their current grade or simply relocated within the AKNG for continued service. One officer, who had been reprimanded twice for fraternization and adultery, is currently the subject of a reported sexual assault.

VI. Findings

A. Finding 1: Sexual Assault. The current AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well organized but lacks the trust of victims due to their lack of confidence in the command.

1) The Team found there was a clear lapse in appropriate military victim services prior to 2012. There were several instances where victim complaints were not properly documented, victims did not receive accurate information regarding their reporting options, victims were not referred to victim advocates, confidentiality was not provided, and in some cases the victims were ostracized by their leaders, peers and units.

2) The Team found that all of the victims that have reported assault through the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program since 2012 appear to have been properly advised as to the availability of services and have been referred, when permitted, to law enforcement entities for investigation. Additionally, medical and counseling services, both military and civilian, have been made available to all documented National Guard victims of sexual assault since 2006.

3) The Team found continued improvement is needed in the following four areas:

a. Protection of victim's confidential information – Victims had reported instances where their confidential information was discussed publically and instances where information regarding their assault was provided in such a manner that they could be, and in some cases were, easily identified as the victims.

b. Offender Accountability – Victims interviewed stated they lacked confidence that their leadership would pursue disciplinary action in their case and reviews of disciplinary actions supported their conclusion.

c. Leadership understanding of Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative options - Victims that had worked with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator were generally satisfied with the support they were receiving from the program, but many were concerned about reprisal from their command and described instances where their command over reached, re-victimizing them in the process.

d. Knowledge of sexual assault reporting options - Individuals that participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

Finding 2: EEO/EO Programs. The AKNG Leadership failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program

1) The Team found that the lack of senior leadership support weakened the AKNG understanding of the EEO/EO policies and resulted in the inconsistent handling of EEO/EO complaints by leaders across the AKNG, which has contributed to the perception that leaders do not support EEO/EO policies and may engage in reprisal. Command emphasis is critical to provide a forum to address complaints and develop preventative programs to prevent future complaints from occurring.

2) This finding is broken down further as follows:

a. The Senior Leadership is not providing sufficient support for the EEO/EO program. State National Guard EEO/EO programs must include a well trained and accessible State Equal Employment Manager with strong leadership emphasis and support. The Team noted that the EEO/EO program within the organization was not well integrated within their units. Many of the EEO/EO offices were located in areas that were not easily accessible or lacked confidentiality and lacked appropriate contact information when unavailable, thereby inhibiting complaints.[36]

b. The State Equal Employment Manager was not actively managing the EEO/EO program and was not providing oversight as required by NGB policy. The Team noted that the State Equal Employment Manager did not have direct access to the TAG and other levels of command, which resulted in missed opportunities to foster regular discussion of and attention to EEO/EO matters within the workplace.

[36] The Team noted that the 176th MEO Office was hard to find, there were no posters directing personnel, and due to its location inside an old commissary building with the ANG LRS unit it provided little confidentiality for the few that sought EO assistance.

(i) Pursuant to NGR 600-22, the State Equal Employment Manager is the custodian of record for discrimination complaint files and related records. The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager appeared to be unaware of most of the complaints that had been made across the state. The OCI Command Climate Survey revealed that, of the 200 incidents wherein respondents reported they had been the subject of harassment/discrimination in the past year, only 35 actually made a report of harassment or discrimination and the State Equal Employment Manager only had documentation for three of these incidents.

(ii) The Team received multiple reports during their onsite interviews of sexual harassment and discrimination that had not been reported to EEO/EO program managers. In some cases the leadership was familiar with the issues but, as no formal complaints had been filed, they were not seeking resolution or prioritizing efforts to address the overall climate. As a result, the issues persisted without leadership intervention.

(iii) Without active monitoring, emphasis, and oversight the EEO/EO managers were unable to gain leadership support for training and resources and the State Equal Employment Manager was unable to identify any trends or problems that required leadership attention.

c. The AKNG EEO/EO program does not have sufficient number of personnel to meet the requirements for the program as established under current policy.

(i) Pursuant to NGB 600-21, the ARNG must have one Human Resources Employment Officer (HR EO) who runs the ARNG program on the part-time state side and one Equal Opportunity Advisor per 0-6 level of command; all of which must be Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute trained. There was a great deal of turnover in the HR EO position and the current HR EO, who lacks requisite DEOMI training, is currently deployed. In the ARNG there are five 0-6 level commands, however only three EOAs are assigned, one of which is currently pending adverse administrative action.

(ii) Pursuant to Air Force Instruction 36-2706, each Air National Guard Wing is required to have an Equal Opportunity Director (officer) and a NCOIC with support provided to the geographically separated units.

Additionally, Military Employment Opportunity (MEO) program managers should not be assigned additional duties that interfere with their MEO responsibilities. In the AKNG there are two Air National Guard Wings and one geographically isolated unit. The Team found that while they met the staffing requirement, the Wings were not supporting their geographically isolated unit. Additionally, the MEO at one Wing was commuting quarterly from Virginia; and prior to that, from Korea making her inaccessible to service members during standard drill periods, when a complainant would have the opportunity to make their complaint or seek assistance.

d. Finally, AKNG Service members do not trust that their leadership will properly address EEO/EO complaints. OCI command climate survey respondents and witnesses interviewed communicated this to the Team during interviews. Thirty five Survey respondents had not filed a complaint due to "fear of reprisal" and twenty seven respondents stated "lack of support from command" as the primary barriers to reporting. When interviewed, the EEO/EO program managers admitted they did not enforce the requirement that leadership complete the Command Reprisal Prevention Plan as required by NGB policy and did not discuss actions that could be considered reprisal with the unit commander.

C. Finding 3: Coordination with Law Enforcement. The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate the coordination of AKNG service member misconduct with local law enforcement.

1) Without an established coordination relationship, commanders do not have information regarding new and ongoing cases of criminal misconduct. In some cases this lack of knowledge allowed service members to remain on full time operational orders while they were under criminal investigation by local law enforcement. This reinforced the perception that the AKNG leadership was unconcerned with the misconduct, and as a result fewer reports of misconduct were made.

2) Interviews revealed that commanders either relied on information provided to them by the offender or scanned open source materials such as Alaska Court System CourtView online, a web based record of AK court matters, to gather updated information about their service members. This is not an adequate substitute for coordination with local law enforcement.

D. Finding 4: Fraud. The AKNG had several instances where fraud had occurred as well as a perception of fraud occurring at the facilities level; however, this fraud was not found to have impacted the reporting of sexual assault.

1) The Team notes that fraudulent and unethical behavior leads to a lack of confidence and trust in senior leadership, and this is a key component to victim reporting behavior. There were two specific instances where well-known fraudulent activity had occurred, neither of which were connected to sexual misconduct. The issues were investigated by organizations outside of the AKNG, and some level of administrative action and or criminal prosecution had occurred. In both instances, there was a perception that senior leaders either endorsed or neglected actions that allowed the fraud to occur. The Team notes, however, that the AKNG has demonstrated an improved emphasis to target fraud which was evident in their active internal review program which detects and prevents fraudulent activity.

2) The Team also found there is currently a concern over the management of state employees under the cooperative agreement's Facilities Operations and Maintenance Agreement (FOMA) and a perception that the lack of federal oversight violated federal law and policy. The Team reviewed the internal review that was conducted on the Alaska Air National Guard in 2013 which specifically addressed the above areas as issues that needed to be corrected and called for "attributable" controls to be put in place. Interviews with the USPFO revealed that the recommendations have been largely implemented and that the current accounting system is now auditable. However, the Team lacked the subject matter expertise to ensure that these changes are being implemented.

E. Finding 5: Command Climate. The climate survey highlighted the fact that actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding the trust and confidence in the leadership of the AKNG.

1) The Team found that some of the AKNG senior leadership lacked a true open door policy.[37] An open door policy is meant to encourage subordinate members to raise issues or concerns they have which they believe they cannot address within their current chain of command. The open door policy is generally published and available for members in the unit to view. The Team noted that in some instances the open door policy required the service member to schedule the meeting through their current leadership, or it provided that once scheduled the meeting would include their current leadership. While each commander sets his own open door policies, this practice was counterproductive as members reported they were dissuaded from raising issues they believed they could not resolve within the command. Additionally, as is traditionally the case, the senior leader's policy will inform the junior leader's policy which has had a cascading effect upon the force in Alaska.

2) The Team found that the AKNG does not have a strong mentoring program. Junior commanders stated they did not receive senior level guidance or mentoring and that there was no venue available that would encourage the sharing of ideas and information and to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. This was also true within the different support organizations such as personnel, legal, and EEO/EO.

3) The Team found there was a perception that the members of the Recruiting and Retention Command received preferential treatment. There was a history of reports of criminal misconduct coming from the Recruiting and Retention Command which was not timely investigated creating an impression for several witnesses of favoritism, bias, complacency, or delay of justice. The AKNG leadership had received complaints in 2010 of criminal activity that included inappropriate relationships, fraudulent use of government equipment, adultery and sexual assault. These allegations were not investigated by the AKNG until December 2012. Individuals involved in this misconduct are currently the subject of several disciplinary boards. Though many individuals interviewed were aware of the recent disciplinary boards, witnesses expressed doubt that the TAG will approve results that recommend unfavorable action against members of this command.

4) The Team also found there is a lack of transparency in the personnel management system. Members interviewed were confused about the various promotion requirements and roles of various senior leaders in the process. Additionally, there was no structured mentoring program or regular command/special branch meetings that would provide a venue to discuss misconduct, EO/EEO, promotions, appropriate ethical conduct, etc. In the absence of such a venue, junior leaders and advisors are not receiving the leadership emphasis needed for personnel programs (such as EEO\EO) and are not benefiting from the experience of their leaders which has adversely impacted the perceptions of junior and senior leaders. Many interviewees perceived that favoritism was occurring, when in many cases appropriate and thoughtful personnel decisions were being made.

5) The Team found there was a perception that the AKNG leadership, to include the TAG, were engaged in ethical and moral misconduct and therefore they lacked the moral high ground to take appropriate action when disciplinary matters arose. This perception was articulated during personal interviews and documented in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The Team, however, does not have the authority to investigate misconduct by senior government officials (O-6 promotable and general officers) as such, all allegations were referred to the appropriate service investigative body. While the Team did not investigate these allegations, the Team found the allegations pervasive; as a result, whether the allegations are accurate or not, this perception must be addressed in order to restore faith and confidence in the AKNG leadership.

6) The "Overall Unit Summary" in the OCI Command Climate Survey shows the AKNG falls at or below the National Guard average in most of the categories assessed. Notwithstanding these numbers, the survey does not reflect a broken AKNG, merely one that needs administrative and "corporate culture" improvement while maintaining its current high level of operational capability. Issues remain regarding fear of reprisal, lack of accountability and lack of confidence in the AKNG leadership based on the interviews conducted and documentation collected by the Team.

7) The Team found that AKNG commanders are not providing consistent support to victims of discrimination and sexual assault. Several victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment stated they were ostracized by their unit after reporting their experience. Many of these victims continue to receive counseling because of the reprisal they believe they experienced. The failure to properly train and document reprisal, noted previously in the findings related to EO/EEO, greatly undermined the effective response of commanders.

VII. Additional Findings Regarding the Administration of Justice

The Team finds the AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct. While the administration of justice and personnel management is a command responsibility, several of the delays involved in the processing of administrative actions were directly attributed to AKNG management of legal support.

Due to challenges associated with the prosecution of offenses under the Alaska Code of Military Justice (ACMJ), commanders rely solely on administrative measures or tools to maintain order and discipline within their force. [38] In the AKNG, all of these tools appear to be used more or less appropriately, with two exceptions: removal from the AGR program and administrative discharges. The Team noted long delays and reluctance to use both AGR removal and administrative discharge processes.

The Team assessed each of the following as contributing to these problems: weak discipline imposed upon the force; a forgiving command climate; overly cautious and inexperienced commanders; a lack of experience in processing actions by subordinate commanders; and a lack of available legal counsel to advise commanders and investigating officers (IOs) or to conduct timely legal reviews for approval and imposition. Additionally there was a lack of an adequate action-tracking mechanism.[39]

Justice is both a senior leader and a SJA issue. Many of the delays the Team found seemed to be attributable to the office of the SJA and the chronic lack of staff with the mission of supporting what is in many regards an operational full-time force. Dating back to 2006, the Team found several examples of substandard members who were properly processed for administrative discharge, only to have discharge actions delayed indefinitely,

[38] These tools generally include: informal counseling; a written letter of counseling (LOC) or reprimand (LOR); annotating misconduct on a member's evaluation/performance report; withholding or delaying (or modifying) promotions; change in duty assignments, shift assignments or transfers; administrative demotion; removing active guard/reserve (AGR) members from their full-time orders; and, finally, administrative separation from the National Guard.

[39] The Director of the Joint Staff recently developed a tracking system and was holding monthly boards to gain better oversight increased awareness along these lines will improve her efforts.

unexecuted, re-characterized or re-examined by senior leadership. While senior leaders have the authority to take final action, which includes modifying final dispositions when they deem appropriate, there appeared to be a lack of transparency in these decisions, thereby undermining the integrity of the process.

Much of the delay in administrative discharge processing appears to be intertwined with state-imposed requirements which impede the processing of early termination of AGR orders.[40] When a National Guard member is recommended for removal from the AGR program, the member is entitled to due process. In many of the other states the member is given just a few days to respond – specifically, seven days in the ANG component and fifteen days in the ARNG component. If the member responds to contest the proposed removal, TAG decides whether or not removal/curtailment is appropriate. In the Air components, the member may appeal (again, to TAG), but the separation proceeds.

The AKNG's inability to utilize this force management tool is directly attributed to the Alaska Supreme Court case of State v. Bowen, 953 P.2d 888 (Alaska 1998). As a result of this case, the JFHQ SJA has advised commanders and unit-level judge advocates that whenever a member's misconduct is of sufficient severity that discharge is also warranted, a single, combined "adversarial hearing" should be held. This level of process requires lengthy delays to convene a hearing, during which time the member continues receiving a federal paycheck. As a consequence, these members, accused of misconduct, continue to perform duties, often with little more than "make-work" or "do-nothing" assignments. The Team heard very clearly from a number of interviewees that this perceived inability to remove full-time AGR members is hurting morale within the AKNG, creating a toxic work environment.

The team reviewed this case and recommends that the AK Attorney General's Office render an opinion, in coordination with the NGB Office of the [40] Under both Army National Guard regulation (NGR 600-5) and Air National Guard instruction (ANGI 36-101), probationary AGR members (generally those with fewer than six years' AGR service and less than 18 years total active federal military service, or TAFMS) are more easily removed than career AGR members (six or more years AGR or more than 18 years TAFMS); but career members may nonetheless be involuntary removed for cause whenever the facts and circumstances of their misconduct warrant removal.

VIII. Recommendations

The Team makes recommendations to address the specific findings that have been addressed. Additionally, the Team makes separate recommendations for the administration of justice in the AKNG.

A. Recommendation 1: Sexual Assault. The Team has seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the AKNG.

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Continue the education of AKNG service members on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program, to include the availability of resources, advocates, counsel and information regarding confidential reporting options,

2) Improve the reporting process to ensure victims' information is kept confidential.

3) Ensure action taken in each of the cases investigated is shared with the victim through the VA program. Specific guidance is outlined and required by DoDI 6495.02.

4) Develop ways to provide transparent and informed justice regarding sexual assault matters, as well as other misconduct, to shift the culture from acceptance to accountability.

5) Reinforce leadership education on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative resources available to the command.

6) Set the tone for sexual assault and harassment awareness by strengthening the policies that are meant to educate soldiers and airmen about respect and responsibility for one another.

7) The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator needs to reinforce training on reporting options with special emphasis on who can take a restricted report. Individuals that participated in the Team survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the SAPR program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

B. Recommendation 2: EO Programs. The Team has five separate recommendations to improve the AKNG Equal Employment Opportunity program

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Reinforce the AKNG EEO/EO program to ensure individuals understand options in regards to privileged communications and protection from retaliation; visibly increasing leadership support is paramount.

2) Ensure their AKNG EEO/EO program includes well-trained and accessible EO Program participants. The SEEM must have direct access to TAG or the other levels of command in order to facilitate a discussion regarding EO within the workplace. Additionally, the EEO/EO program must be incorporated into leadership discussions such as the monthly Sexual Assault Review Board (SARB) in order to facilitate the exchange of information relevant to combating sexual assault and harassment.

3) Ensure the AKNG EEO/EO program meets or exceeds the personnel requirements for the program as established under current policy and that all EEO/EO personnel are trained and certified in accordance with Service guidelines. The Team further recommends that an EOA position be formally established at Ft Greely. Although Ft Greely is not an O-6 level command which would require a separate EOA, due to their remote location and the issues identified by the Team as highlighted in the analysis regarding disparate treatment, continued EO representation at that location is warranted.

4) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to receive additional training on her roles and responsibilities in order to improve current program oversight and case tracking.

5) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to conduct additional training on EEO/EO complaints management for senior leaders that includes training on creating a Command Reprisal Prevention Plan.

C. Recommendation 3. Coordination with Law Enforcement.

The Team recommends that all allegations of misconduct under investigation by local law enforcement be tracked by the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer. Additionally when appropriate, the Staff Judge Advocate should make recommendations for administrative action pending the finding of local law enforcement officials, to include removal from the AGR program.

D. Recommendation 4: Fraud.

The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG. Regarding the theft and misuse of federal resources by service members, the Team recommends that the AKNG continue its efforts to combat fraud through its current Internal Review program.

E. Recommendation 5: Climate. The Team has seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's assessment and through the OCI Command Climate Survey.

The AKNG Leadership needs to:

1) Review their open door policies across the command to ensure they are sending the right message that encourages reporting that provides a venue for members at all levels to raise issues and recommendations to the leadership in a way that is free of reprisal. The Team noted that the Leadership's open door policy was not truly open door.

2) Improve its mentoring program of officers across the state. Command update briefs provide a venue for the leadership to share their vision and for commanders to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. Therefore the Team recommends that the AKNG hold quarterly leader meetings. These meetings would be centered on areas of emphasis such as, commanders, personnel, EO, Legal, and Facilities Management, and these meetings would be joint between with both Army and Air National Guard participation. The meetings need not be in person; VTC and telephone bridges could be used so long as all members are provided the opportunity to openly discuss issues and educate each other regarding issues and challenges.

3) Reinforce, train, and educate on reprisal and retaliation policy. The Department of the Army recently issued guidance to the Army which prohibits retaliation for reporting a criminal offense and directs that investigations following the allegation occur either by the IG or within the command.[41] Such guidance should be reviewed and implemented by the AKNG.

4) Develop a level of transparency to reinforce the concept that justice is being pursued, specifically regarding actions that involve promotion and discipline.

5) Address the validity of claims of ethical and moral misconduct.

6) The AKNG senior leadership and second tier commands need to review the results of the OCI Command Climate Survey, specifically the recommendations for additional changes that can be made within their organizations. A break down for the individual sections surveyed is available upon request.

7) Focus on protecting victims of discrimination and sexual assault from being re-victimized and protect their identity.

[41] See Secretary of the Army Directive 2014-20, Prohibition of Retaliation Against Soldiers for Reporting Criminal Offense. Retaliation is defined as taking or threatening to take adverse or unfavorable personnel action, ostracism, which includes excluding from social acceptance privilege or friendship, and acts of cruelty, oppression and maltreatment.

IX. Additional Recommendations Regarding Military Justice

Recognizing the Team does not include members of the AK Bar, the Team identified eight areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the role of military justice within the state.

1) Review current military legal support to determine whether or not it is optimal to meet the needs of the AKNG.

2) Appoint an AKNG military judge and have one or more trained and certified at all times.

3) Participate in the Army National Guard Trial Defense program in order to meet the demands of defense support.

4) Enhance AKNG participation in the NG Special Victim Counsel Program in order to meet the needs of sexual assault victims through individual legal representation; consider requesting a full time NG SVC located within AK.

5) Coordinate with the State Attorney General on the proper interpretation of Bowen as it relates to the AKNG AGR removal process so as to enable commanders to swiftly remove members involved in misconduct from the full-time force.[42] Until the AKNG develops a process regarding AGR removal, the AKNG might consider holding a pre-termination hearing immediately as a precursor to convening an administrative discharge board.

6) Review and improve training for Commander Directed Investigations. Develop a smart book that will assist in advising investigators how to conduct investigations. Multiple Army Regulation 15-6 investigations at Ft. Greely did not uncover all the issues that started to surface at that installation; as a result, leadership was not able to obtain a full picture of the problems in time to interdict, train, and educate.

[42] It should be noted that removal from the AGR program is a force management tool but that removal itself does not provide "bad paper" and that the leadership must still follow the removal with appropriate adverse administrative action when warranted.

7) Create an action tracking system to improve oversight of all adverse administrative actions. This system (whether paper or electronic, centralized or decentralized) should include: the date of misconduct; the date it became known to leadership; the date an inquiry or investigation began, was completed and received a legal review (if an inquiry/investigation was necessary); the date the adverse administrative action was initiated; the date the documents and notice of adverse action are provided to the service member; the date an action arrives at the Joint Forces Headquarters (JFHQ) for processing; the date the action receives a legal review by the JFHQ SJA; and the date the action arrives at the Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army or TAG's desk for action, execution or appellate consideration.

8) Conduct a thorough review of AKNG personnel files to reinstate documents that were erroneously removed from official military personnel files and to remove locally filed letters which have exceeded their expiration date.

9) Review the existing Alaska state code to determine if it is optimally crafted to serve state needs regarding the AKNG.

X. Additional Allegations

Throughout the assessment, the Team received information regarding allegations of past misconduct that witnesses felt were unaddressed or improperly addressed by the leadership. In each case where specific information was provided, the Team sought any and all information related to the allegation and conducted personal interviews to ensure thoroughness in our review. When appropriate, these matters were brought to the direct attention of AKNG leadership for action. The Team noted that this misconduct was similar to the misconduct identified in the prior allegations, including allegations of fraud, adultery, sexual assault and reprisal occurring within other sections of the AKNG. While evidence pertaining to these additional allegations was not material to the Team's assessment, it provided context for the Team as we evaluated the veracity of the information that was collected as part of the main assessment. The recommendations enumerated above would also serve to address these new allegations as well as future misconduct. Finally, senior leader allegations of misconduct were referred to the applicable service IG.

XI. Investigator's Comments

The AKNG has been the subject of multiple inquiries and assessments, and as a result, the organization may be "over sensed." Commanders and junior members interviewed scoffed at the surveys, stating that initially they thought leadership wanted to know what the issues were, but after the members reported discontent on numerous assessments without any apparent change in the system, they gave up.

Guard members largely viewed the surveys and IG sensing sessions as ineffective and unproductive. However, the AKNG leadership believes these tools are providing them vital information needed to address AKNG needs. This has led to a misperception, whereby they AKNG leadership believe they are addressing soldier and airmen needs, but soldiers and airmen believe their leadership just does not care. This attitude is reflected in the relatively low number of respondents who elected to provide feedback in the Team's Climate Survey (i.e., AKARNG 28.2% response and AKANG 23.02% response).

Appendix B. Investigation of Sexual Assault

As was noted in the Analysis of Sexual Assault in the AKNG above, investigation and differences in terminology have impeded the prosecution of sexual assault matters.

A. Investigation:

The active military services have, as a component of their force, military criminal investigative organizations (MCIOs) such as the Army Criminal Investigative Division and the Air Force Office of Special Investigations which are required by DoD policy to investigate all allegations of sexual assault involving federal forces.[1] These MCIOs, however, lack jurisdiction to investigate crimes which involve the National Guard when those crimes occur by members serving in a non-federal status, e.g., state active duty (SAD) or Title 32 status.

As a result of the above jurisdictional issues, sexual assault allegations against members of the National Guard not serving in a federal status are referred to local law enforcement. By DoD policy military commanders are not permitted to administratively investigate the facts and a circumstance surrounding a sexual assault until all law enforcement investigative work has concluded or coordination for inquiry has been made.[2]

In Alaska this meant most of the unrestricted reports were referred to Alaska state law enforcement entities.[3] More recently, the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations has investigated allegations of sexual assault.

B. Sexual Assault Defined:

[1] A February 2014 update to DoD Instruction 6495.02 (dated 28 March 2013) states: "A unit commander who receives an Unrestricted Report of an incident of sexual assault shall immediately refer the matter to the appropriate military criminal investigation organization (MCIO).

[2] DoD 6495.02 states that "a unit commander shall not conduct internal command directed investigations on sexual assault or delay immediately contacting the MCIOs while attempting to assess the credibility of the report." Prior to this change, commanders were not expressly prohibited from directing a commander's inquiry into allegations of a sexual assault. Pursuant to CNGBN 0400.01 Command Investigative options are limited to military criminal investigative organizations, local law enforcement, or the NGB Office of Complex Investigations.

[3] Of the 37 reported cases of sexual assault 19 were unrestricted cases of which 3 fell under the jurisdiction of MCIOs due to the status of the offender at the time of the assault.

Not all military allegations of sexual assault arise to the level of a sexual assault under state law. DoD Directive 6495.01, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) Program, defines "sexual assault" as: "Intentional sexual contact characterized by use of force, threats, intimidation, or abuse of authority or when the victim does not or cannot consent. Sexual contact is defined to include "Any touching, or causing another person to touch, either directly or through the clothing, any body part of any person, if done with intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person."[4]

The Alaska Revised Statutes defines sexual assault as including both sexual penetration or sexual contact where the victim did not consent or was incapacitated, mentally incapable, or unaware. Sexual contact includes "knowingly touching, directly or through clothing, the victim's genitals, anus, or female breast; or knowingly causing the victim to touch, directly or through clothing, the defendant's or victim's genitals, anus, or female breast."[5]

The distinction between any part of the body and specific parts of the body, as well as the absence of assault based on abuse of authority, are two specific areas where the DoD definition and Alaska's state law differ.

[5] Alaska Revised Statutes Section 11.81.900.

Appendix C: Justice in the Alaska National Guard

Justice in the non-federalized National Guard is at times challenging. The Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) applies to all service members in a federal military status under Title 10 of the United States Code. However, a state's National Guard members typically perform their daily military duties in a non-federalized status under Title 32 (T-32) [1] of the United States Code, and consequently they are not usually subject to the federal UCMJ.

The TAG, like any commander, exercises discretionary command authority over military personnel within his command. When issues of good order and discipline come before TAG, he has a wide range of actions available based on what he decides is the appropriate course of action. These discretionary actions range from doing nothing; to judicial disciplinary actions pursuant to the state code of military justice; or to adverse administrative actions, including counseling, reprimands, relief from command/position, reassignment and separation. The chosen action is within the discretion of each TAG based upon his exercise of command authority which flows through all levels of state command to the TAG and to the Governor. Federal authorities, to include the National Guard Bureau, do not have command authority over the members of the ARNG and ANG when in a non-federalized status.

Many states have adopted state codes of military justice to address misconduct committed by military personnel serving within the state in a non-federalized status. Alaska has such a code, the ACMJ, but it lacks "teeth." More specifically, the applicability of the ACMJ is more restrictive than that of most state military justice codes in that it expressly withholds jurisdiction for any crime which can be tried by civil authorities.[2] Therefore, "common law" crimes such as rape, indecent exposure/touching, and all other assaults cannot be criminally prosecuted under the ACMJ, but must instead be referred to civilian authorities such as the Anchorage Police Department (APD) or, for most of the AKNG's dispersed units, the Alaska State Troopers (AST). This leaves only inherently military offenses – such as insubordination, malingering, asleep at post, drunk on duty – to be tried by military courts martial under the ACMJ. This is not optimal.

[1] There are a few missions performed by the NG in a T10 status they include the Homeland Defense Missions such as the Space warning and missile defense mission currently being performed at Clear AFB and Ft Greely. Operators actually sit "crew" on shift; or when a fighter pilot sits runway alert or launches for air defense under the NORAD bilateral treaty or for Operation Noble Eagle

[2] See Alaska Statute 26.05.300, which provides that "An offense committed by a member of the militia, organized or unorganized, shall be tried in civil courts and prosecuted by civil authorities except offenses of a purely military nature."

Convening a General or Special Court-Martial under a state's code of military justice takes considerable effort and expense. Accordingly, the authority to convene courts martial is uniformly withheld throughout the several states to those cases involving severe misconduct. In Alaska, the Team found no record of an ACMJ court martial since passage of the original ACMJ in 1955. In fact, the leadership across the AKNG was largely under the impression no ACMJ even existed. However, the ACMJ is in force, and it was supplemented in 1992 by a Governor's executive order published as Alaska ARNG Regulation 27-10 and ANG Regulation 111-9.[3] [4]

A Special Court Martial may be convened under the ACMJ by commanders as low as Battalion or Group level for enlisted members, and the Special Court may impose the same potential punishments as a General Court Martial, except the maximum fine is $100.[5]

A Summary Court martial may be convened under the ACMJ by any commander for enlisted members only and may assess a mere $25 fine and forfeiture of one month's pay. There is, however, no provision for a Summary Court Martial under the Governor's order/implementing regulations, leading us to question whether or not a Summary Court is, in practice, still available under Alaska law.

[3] The ACMJ also applies to the State Defense Force and Alaska Naval Militia and is published under their regulations as well.

[4] Under the ACMJ and its implementing regulations, the most severe punishment for even the most severe "inherently military crime" (e.g. mutiny and sedition) on conviction by a General Court Martial convened by the Governor himself, is a $200 fine, forfeiture of two months' pay & allowances, a reprimand, and 60 days' confinement (reduction in rank to the lowest grade is limited to noncommissioned officers, meaning that neither officers nor junior enlisted members may be reduced). While a General Court Martial may impose a Dishonorable Discharge (in actuality, a "separation") from the Alaska military forces, such a service characterization will apply only to the member's National Guard service – and not to their federal "Reserve of the Army" or "Reserve of the Air Force" service, limiting the effectiveness of such action.

[5] The regulation purports to permit 6 months' forfeiture, but this is at odds with the statute which permits only equivalent punishments for this lesser forum; the service characterization for a State discharge, only, is capped at a Bad Conduct Discharge.

Like the UCMJ, the ACMJ incorporates a Non-Judicial Punishment (NJP) provision, under which a commander may offer a member suspected of a crime the opportunity to have guilt or innocence decided by the commander in a comparatively informal setting, with available punishment capped at a substantially lower level than typically permitted by courts martial. But NJP has absolutely no utility if a commander is not willing to proceed to a court martial if the offer of NJP is rejected, as it would be likely under the ACMJ owing to the infrequency of trials and the minimal maximum punishments. Such a scenario would also undermine good order and discipline within a unit.

MEMORANDUM FOR Members of the Alaska National Guard

Subject: Command Climate Survey

1. Thank you for your participation in the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigation (NGB OCI) Climate Survey and Assessment of the Alaska National Guard. Both the interviews and the survey responses yielded important information for the Assessment Team which assisted us in identifying areas within the Alaska National Guard that can be strengthened or improved upon. All information collected was considered by the Assessment Team.

2. Some of the information provided by you in either the interviews or through your written survey responses could result in your identification. Therefore, if you have any concerns regarding your participation in any part of the Assessment please contact the AKNG IG, David R. Wille, Colonel, USAF at (907)428-6060 or via email at david.r.wille.mil@mail.mil or to NGB OCI at: ng.ncr.arng.mbx.ngb-ja-oi@mail.mil in the subject line please include "AK1401." Additionally, if you have been a victim of sexual assault or have questions about the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program contact Ms. Octavia Thompson at (907) 428-6219 or via email at octavia.l.thompson2.civ@mail.mil.

3. Commanders who receive a complaint relating to their participation must forward that complaint to the State IG who will bring the matter to NGB OCI's attention.

Hi all,

The Governor mentioned in his press conference this afternoon that any National Guard members who have been victimized should call Cindy Sims directly. She will be available to talk with all that call into the office. Please transfer them directly to her line should they call in, or if she isn't in the office, transfer to her cell phone. If she doesn't pick up her cell, find me and I will find her. Please forward this message to anyone who answers any of our phones and be sure to capture voicemails if they are left. Messages can be forwarded right to Cindy's line or sent to her via email (cc me so I can make sure to schedule calls for her). Thank you.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE No. 14-149

Governor Releases National Guard Report, Adjutant General Out
Calls for Special Team to Restore Respect and Responsibility

September 4, 2014, Anchorage, Alaska – Following the conclusion of a six-month independent review and assessment of open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard, Governor Sean Parnell released the findings today, and took the resignation of the adjutant general, Major General Thomas H. Katkus. The governor originally requested the assessment from the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in February.

The report found Guard members have a lack of trust and confidence in the Alaska National Guard leadership's ability to handle sexual assault cases and other misconduct. Further, the report found that favoritism, ethical misconduct and fear of reprisal have eroded trust and confidence in Guard leadership.

"The dedicated men and women who serve in the Alaska National Guard deserve better and I am committed to restoring the trust they are entitled to," Governor Parnell said. "While the report's findings are deeply troubling, I know that the overwhelming majority of Alaska National Guard personnel serve admirably and honorably. We will take all necessary steps to ensure respect, responsibility and trust are restored."

Governor Parnell requested and received the resignation of Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general, and commissioner of Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. Brigadier General Mike Bridges will serve as acting commissioner on an interim basis until a new adjutant general is named. The governor will also closely examine the command structure within the Alaska National Guard, which will include further staffing changes.

Governor Parnell requested the National Guard Bureau's help in assembling a team to implement the recommendations in the report to restore a healthy and safe working environment for the men and women of the Guard. The governor has requested the OCI provide personnel to assist with implementing the recommendations outlined in the report. The team will include a representative from the Office of the Governor.

The governor has requested a further investigation into allegations of fraud pertaining to the misuse of Guard assets.

I. Executive Summary

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard [(AKNG)]." The request highlighted concerns over reports of sexual assault and allegations of a hostile work environment within the AKNG. The Governor's request also sought an overall assessment of the AKNG's command structure and its responses in cases of sexual assault that were otherwise referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition.

Synopsis

The National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations conducted a statewide assessment into the Alaska National Guard and made findings and recommendations in the areas of sexual assault, EEO/EO matters, coordination with local law enforcement, Alaska National Guard member misconduct, command climate and the administration of justice.

A. Findings

- The AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well-organized, but victims do not trust the system due to an overall lack of confidence in the command;

- The AKNG leadership has failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program;

- The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate coordination with local law enforcement regarding cases of misconduct committed by members of the AKNG;

- There were several instances of fraud committed by AKNG members and leadership at the facilities level, but that this fraudulent activity did not have an impact on the reporting of sexual assault. Examples of fraud included embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and misuse of government equipment for personal gain. On 27 August 2014, Governor Parnell requested that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- Actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding trust and confidence in AKNG leadership; and

- The AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct.

B. Recommendations

- The NGB-JA/OCI Team provided seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the state;

- The Team provided five separate recommendations to improve the State Equal Employment Opportunity program;

- The Team recommends that allegations of misconduct under investigation by law enforcement be tracked by the AKNG Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer;

- The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a separate assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- The Team recommends that all levels of command in the AKNG reevaluate their approach to leading soldiers in a positive manner and provided seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's visit and through the climate survey; and

- The Team identified nine areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the administration of justice within the state.

II. Background

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard." In accordance with CNGBM 0400.01, the Chief Counsel for the National Guard Bureau (NGB) appointed an NGB-JA/OCI Assessment Team, hereinafter referred to as "the Team." The assessment was conducted from 19 March 2014 until 13 June 2014.

On or about 19 March 2014, members of the Team travelled to Anchorage, Alaska to meet with Governor Parnell and obtain his specific guidance on the scope of the assessment. Governor Parnell requested an independent look at the AKNG's training, reporting, investigating, and case disposition practices in the areas of sexual assault, hostile work environment (e.g., sexual harassment), and fraud. Additionally, the Governor requested that the Team review matters that were referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition but never prosecuted and assess the current culture, policies, and personnel practices of the AKNG (Army and Air) to determine their effect on the current command climate.

The Team developed an action plan which included: conducting a statewide command climate survey; collecting identified data requirements; conducting on-site interviews at all major AKNG locations; interviewing all AKNG senior leaders, to include the Adjutant General (TAG), the Assistant Adjutant General for both the Air and Army National Guard, and the Director of the Joint Staff; and coordinating with Army Criminal Investigation Division (CID) and local Alaskan law enforcement officials.

From 1 April through 1 June 2014, a command climate survey was conducted using a DoD-approved survey tool through the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute. The Team conducted most of the interviews and reviewed data provided during the timeframe of 28 April through 12 June 2014.

The Team collected volumes of data and travelled over 1,000 miles, visiting Ft. Greely, Eielson Air Force Base (AFB), Clear Air Force Station (AFS), and Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson (JBER). The Team also conducted over 185 personal interviews. Those interviewed included current, former, and retired

members of the Alaska Army and Air National Guard; members of the active duty U.S. Air Force; part-time and full-time civilian AKNG employees; civilian state military forces leaders; local, state and federal civilian law enforcement officials; and U.S. Army Alaska (USARAK) Criminal Investigation Division (CID) officials.

The Team reviewed all allegations and issues identified in the initial request for assistance, as well as subsequent allegations identified through various means including e-mail communications, federal and state congressional submissions, anonymous correspondence, recent media reports, and on-site interviews.[1]

The Team's directive and goal was not to re-investigate previous allegations of sexual assault, hostile work environment, fraud or other misconduct, but rather to assess the instances of misconduct as a whole, identifying common themes among behavior that was already known to have occurred, further evaluating how those incidents were handled by the command. The Team did this by reviewing each allegation of misconduct and the corresponding investigation through analysis of data provided by the AKNG in response to the Team's data request (Tab C) and thru personal interviews conducted by the Team. In this way, each of the Governor's requests is individually addressed within this report.

[1] The Team reviewed all documentation regarding the foregoing matters, to include assessing the administrative actions taken and the current status of the individuals involved. In some cases, the Team re-interviewed witnesses to collect additional evidence or to clarify prior statements. During the course of these interviews, additional and insightful information regarding the organization, its operating standards, and unique challenges became apparent. In order to limit the scope of the assessment to the directed matters, however, the team explored only those additional allegations that either clarified the initial action of the command or provided factual information not previously identified during the initial inquiry.

III. Action Plan

The Team developed the following action plan to address each of the Governor's area of concern: Sexual Assault; Hostile Work Environment; Fraud, Coordination with Law Enforcement; Misconduct; and Command Climate. Each is addressed more fully below.

A. Sexual Assault

In response to the allegations of sexual assault, the Team focused on four areas: review of reported allegations of sexual assault and the actions taken regarding those reports; interviews with victims of the reported sexual assaults, which included both unrestricted and restricted reports[2]; review of AKNG sexual assault policies, practices, training and command emphasis; and review of the results of the NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding sexual assault).

The AKNG provided a matrix of all reported incidents of sexual assault since the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program was initiated in 2006. There were 37 reports of sexual assault; of those, 17 were unrestricted and eight identified sexual assault perpetrators. Some of the allegations reported were investigated by the AKNG; however, most of the allegations involved civilian perpetrators and were referred to AK local law enforcement officials for investigation.

B. Hostile Work Environment

A hostile work environment occurs when there is discriminatory or harassing behavior that is so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[3] Consistent with the Governor's request, the Team focused on three areas: review of all allegations of hostile work environment, including a review of all Equal Employment Opportunity/Equal Opportunity (EEO/EO) complaints and the action taken; interviews with formal complainants and prospective complainants; and the results of the OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding EEO/EO matters).

The Team requested a roster of all EEO/EO complaints going back 10 years; however, there was no clear record-keeping system available that would provide that information.[4] The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM) provided details regarding three active complaints currently being addressed within AKNG units. Additional concerns and complaints were discovered by the Team during the course of the assessment phase and referred to the SEEM or discussed with responsible commanders, as appropriate with the concurrence of the disclosing interviewees. Finally, information regarding the EEO/EO program was provided in the OCI climate survey.

C. Fraud

In response to allegations of fraudulent activities in the AKNG, the Team focused on three areas: review of reported incidents of fraudulent activities and the action taken regarding such reports; interviews with commanders, investigating officers, internal review officials, and the office of the USPFO; and review of internal audits conducted by the AKNG.

The Team reviewed several minor reported incidents of inappropriate use of the Government Purchase Card, each of which was administratively handled through a letter of reprimand/admonishment. There were two high-profile fraud incidents: one incident involved a senior AKNG officer who misused government equipment for personal use, and the another incident involved a senior AKNG enlisted member who re-directed donated funds for personal gain. While each incident was investigated by agencies outside the AKNG, the Team interviewed several personnel involved in those investigations as well as members within the AKNG during the time period when the fraudulent activity occurred. During the course of these interviews, several questions regarding the lawful use of federal funds by state and federal program managers were raised so the Team expanded the scope of fraud to include a review of the AKNG facilities program.

[4] When interviewed, the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the individual responsible for State EEO/EO management and oversight, did not have a database which tracked complaints.

Document ID: 0.7.798.39055.1 Page 8 of 57 SOA-002486

D. Coordination with Law Enforcement

In response to questions regarding the coordination between the AKNG and local law enforcement, the Team focused on three areas: a review of all written agreements between the AKNG and AK law enforcement organizations from 2004-2014; a review of the list of all reported misconduct made by or to law enforcement or any Military Criminal Investigative Organizations (MCIO) involving AKNG full-time and part-time military personnel over the past 10 years; and interviews with AKNG leaders and local law enforcement personnel.

In most cases, AKNG records only went back to approximately 2009-2010, and there was no standardization across lower-level commands within the AKNG with regard to misconduct reporting and tracking. The AKNG provided information regarding 64 cases of misconduct that was reported to local law enforcement over the last 10 years; of those, 56 resulted in disciplinary action. Interviews with local law enforcement officials provided the most detailed information regarding joint efforts in coordination.

To assess the AKNG leadership's handling of the reports of misconduct, the Team reviewed a list of all incidents of misconduct that were tracked at the unit level as well as paper and digital copies of all AKNG command policies and procedures from 2004 to 2014 pertaining but not limited to sexual assault and harassment, fraternization, DUI, improper use of government equipment, recruiting and retention, and ethical standards of conduct.

The AKNG provided 494 reports of misconduct over the past 10 years.[5] The Team reviewed the files and administrative actions taken in response to the reported misconduct, and it conducted interviews with individuals involved in several of the incidents where administrative action followed.

[5] This number includes the 46 cases that were reported to local law enforcement referenced above and 24 EO cases. Of the total number, 115 cases were designated as general misconduct, 3 were cases of fraud, 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, and 62 were alcohol-related incidents.

F. Command Climate

The Team coordinated with the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute (DEOMI) to initiate an NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey targeted at soliciting feedback from all members of the AKNG, to include part-time, full-time support, and federalized members. The survey directly solicited feedback from within the AKNG regarding their leaders' ability to lead, confidence in their leadership, favoritism and respect. Additionally, the team requested copies of any command climate surveys conducted by the AKNG over the preceding five years, as well as all NGB Safety Assessments and NGB Staff Assistance Visit (SAV) reports.

During the period of 1 April to 1 June 2014, approximately 25% of the AKNG participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The results of the survey, detailed in Appendix A, confirmed the issues identified by the Team during their onsite interviews and reiterated issues that had been raised in the 22 previous surveys conducted by the AKNG.

Pursuant to its appointment memorandum, the Team focused their efforts primarily on allegations identified in the Action Plan. The Team interviewed over 185 witnesses and reviewed volumes of documents in order to establish an understanding of how each of these areas were managed and addressed within the AKNG, and to note deficiencies, identify any common themes; and, where appropriate, make specific remedial recommendations. The Team's findings and recommendations are detailed in Sections VI through IX below.

The Team identified persistent negative themes in the areas of administration and management of legal support and a general lack of confidence and trust in the AKNG leadership at various levels.

The Team concluded that the lack of confidence relating to both the legal support provided to the command and the lack of trust in the AKNG leadership is impeding the organization from reaching its full potential, and this persistent negative theme is contributing to the perception that the AKNG leadership is not addressing the concerns of sexual assault victims.

A. Analysis of Sexual Assault

The Team conducted extensive interviews with victims who had reported sexual assaults, victim advocates, other current and former service members who supported those victims, and the commanders who implement the DoD Sexual Assault and Prevention Response program within their organizations. The Team reviewed the results of its command climate survey, wherein all participants were asked specific questions regarding sexual assault and sexual assault reporting, and the Team concluded there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011. These issues included poor execution, oversight, and management, as well as suspected confidentiality breaches.

The Team concluded that there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011.

1. Sexual Assault Program Management

Prior to 2012, the AKNG Joint Force Headquarters Sexual Assault Response Coordinator was a contract employee. This was consistent across the lower 48 states as the National Guard Joint Forces Headquarters (NG JFHQ) manning requirements did not initially include a requirement for a Title 32, Non-Dual Status Technician to serve as the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Like programs in other states, however, the AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program was, in fact, overseen by a military member assigned to Family Programs within the AKNG personnel section (J1).

The contract employee serving as the AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator had been appropriately certified through the National Guard Bureau's training in the management of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. According to witnesses and records that were reviewed, she operated independently within the AKNG J1 with little actual supervision and without adequate oversight. The Team learned that records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. As a result, victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner as required by DoD Policy.[6]

Prior to 2012 records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. Victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner.

The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contract was managed by the AKNG J1 Director of Family Programs, who, at that time, was not trained in the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. During the Team's interview with the Director, she acknowledged being unaware of the contractor's deficiencies and confirmed that she relied on the expertise of the contractor to inform her of the program's requirements and any deficiencies. As a result, the magnitude of the record-keeping problem in the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program did not surface until the contractor left the position.

A Title 32, non-dual-status technician position was created in 2011. This resulted in the hiring of a trained and qualified Sexual Assault Response Coordinator who was capable of reshaping the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program over the past three years. The Team found the current program to be effective, and the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator to be well-organized, responsive to victims, well-respected, and actively engaged with the AKNG leadership. Her monthly Sexual Assault Review Board meeting is regularly attended by all senior leaders (to include the TAG and the Assistant Adjutants General Air and Army); thereby ensuring these senior leaders are aware of the current program needs and the status of victim's cases. Interviews with victims that have been in contact with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator confirmed they were generally satisfied with the support she has provided.

Prior program deficiencies have had a lingering effect, however. The Team noted that, when discussing the program with other first responders (Judge Advocates and Chaplains), they stated they would not recommend that sexual assault victims report their assault to the AKNG's Victim Advocates, citing prior program deficiencies as the primary reason.

The Team identified additional concerns from an organizational standpoint. Several witnesses stated that, in the case of the Air National Guard, the Victim Advocate position is an additional duty for the executive officer, who sits within the very command headquarters suite that many reporting victims want to avoid. The location of this position is creating the unfounded perception among airmen that the executive officers are unable to provide confidential assistance, despite the officers' availability by phone or email to arrange a meeting elsewhere. This issue was unique to the Air National Guard as the Army National Guard Victim Advocates are more distributed throughout the force and within the ranks.

The OCI command climate survey substantiated that AKNG service members believed they were working in an environment that was safe from sexual assault and that they would receive support from the chain of command and the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, a significant number of respondents perceived substantial barriers to reporting sexual assault, reflecting a possible continuing lack of trust within the command. Interviews with service members revealed that the positive changes in the management of the program since 2011 are not widely known, at least not as well-known as the challenges that existed in the program prior to 2011.

2. Victim Confidentiality

Most of the individuals interviewed stated that they knew who their Victim Advocate was and understood the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; nonetheless, most individuals also indicated that they would not report a sexual assault due to concerns over confidentiality. The Team noted that prior to 2012 there had been instances wherein commanders either obtained the names of victims who made restricted reports of sexual assault or distilled that same information from the "sanitized" reports that were made in contradiction to DoD policy.[7] Additionally, victims reported that in some cases they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making their restricted reports. Such conduct is in violation of DoD policy.

Some victims reported that they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making restricted sexual assault reports.

Several individuals interviewed expressed concern with reporting a sexual assault, questioning the value of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Several senior AKNG service members interviewed expressed the sentiment that they could not afford to be seen as "a victim" or "weak" in their senior leaders' eyes and therefore would not report. Such sentiment creates the perception that the program is unnecessary, sending the wrong message to commanders, which in turn impacts reporting and assistance for victims.

Confidentiality continues to remain a challenge for the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program.

During the on-site assessment, a victim of sexual assault reported to the Team that she had overheard a fellow service member discussing the details of her own assault while at work. Though she was not individually identified and the individual who was reportedly discussing the information likely did not know her identity as the victim, she was understandably disturbed by the casual manner in which her supposedly confidential information was being maintained and openly discussed.

3. Sexual Assault Case Disposition

The team reviewed 37 cases of sexual assault: 15 were either filed as restricted reports or were not investigated at the request of the victim; 20 were investigated by local law enforcement; and 2 were investigated by MCIOs[8]. Of the 20 investigated by local law enforcement, 4 were still open at the time of the Team's assessment and 16 were closed without further investigations. Many of the 16 closed cases involved the use of alcohol, delayed reporting, or had other evidentiary challenges. As a result, these cases were not prosecuted by local authorities.

Notwithstanding the challenges of criminal prosecution, military commanders have administrative tools available to maintain good order and discipline within military units. Therefore, it is appropriate for commanders to consider administrative action following or pending a decision by local authorities to prosecute a sexual assault case. The Team reviewed only one case where the AKNG leadership decided to pursue administrative action against a perpetrator notwithstanding local law enforcement's decision not to prosecute.

The AKNG leadership from 2009-2013 initiated numerous internal administrative investigations into reported sexual assaults. The Team noted, however, that many of these investigations were led by individuals who lacked the specialized training to conduct sexual assault investigations. As a result, the AKNG administrative investigations were not adequately conducted in some cases.[9]

The AKNG's recent efforts to properly investigate and hold offenders accountable for sexual assaults through coordination with law enforcement and OCI complies with DoD guidance on Sexual Assault Prevention and Response.

[8] MCIOs initially investigated 5 allegations however 3 were referred to local law enforcement once due to jurisdictional issues. Of the 2 cases remaining 1 case went to Court Martial and resulted in acquittal, the other was closed due to insufficiency of evidence.
[9] To address the specific concern that state National Guards lacked sufficient investigative resources, the NGB established the NGB Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in 2012.

Several investigations conducted in the AKNG since 2013 were conducted either by OCI [10] or by an officer certified to investigate on OCI's behalf while serving in a state status. Several of these cases were proceeding toward administrative action at the time of the Team's assessment.

Sexual assault investigations within the National Guard require specialized training due to the complex jurisdictional issues presented. Likewise, state codes typically vary from the DoD definition of sexual assault. Accordingly, not all allegations meeting the military's definition of sexual assault will be investigated by local law enforcement or prosecuted under state law.[11] A detailed discussion of these jurisdictional issues is provided at Appendix C.

B. Analysis of EEO/EO Matters

The Governor requested that the assessment address behavior that may have created "a hostile environment and culture within portions of the AKNG." To assess whether a work environment is "hostile," the Team had to evaluate whether discriminatory and harassing behavior existed and, if founded, whether such behavior was so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[12]

To determine whether a hostile work environment existed, the Team reviewed formal and informal EEO/EO complaints. The data request revealed an incomplete record of complaints regarding hostile work environment, discrimination and sexual harassment.[13] Accordingly, most of the information

[10] Pursuant to CNGBN 0400.01, command investigative options are limited to military criminal investigative organizations, local law enforcement, or the NGB Office of Complex Investigations.

[12] NG PAM 600-22, paragraph 5-6d, provides that when conducting an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment, investigators must document whether or not the harassment was quid pro quo (submission to such conduct is made explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment) or a hostile environment (conduct unreasonably interfering with an individual's job performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, offensive working environment). See also Burlington v. Ellerth, 118 S. Ct. 2257 (1998).

[13] Notwithstanding, the Team did not identify any instances leading to a conclusion of an affirmative withholding of information had occurred, just a general lack of oversight and management.

reviewed by the Team was collected during interviews with the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the unit Equal Opportunity Advisors (EOAs), individual witnesses, and OCI survey responses. The AKNG EEO/EO Office did not maintain a database to track EEO/EO complaints; however, the AKNG SEEM reported there were three known EO complaints. This is inconsistent with the 200 instances identified in the OCI command climate survey, of which 35 were reported to someone within the service member's organization.[14] Additionally, the Team notes that these survey results were only reflective of the 25% of the AKNG who both participated in the survey and responded to questions regarding discrimination and harassment in the workplace, thus indicating that the "real" number was likely higher.

The Team interviewed several individuals who stated that they were subjected to a hostile work environment characterized by inappropriate sexual comments and disparate treatment based on ethnic/national origin. These witnesses stated during interviews that they were treated disparately and had elevated their concerns through their chain of command without successful resolution. A few stated they have lost faith in their leadership's ability to do the right thing. Many referenced the lack of disciplinary action taken by leadership against members who were known to have engaged in fraternization or inappropriate conduct. A further analysis into the specific areas of sexual harassment, disparate treatment, and reprisal/retaliation is included below.

1. Sexual Harassment

Sexual Harassment occurs when there are unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or other inappropriate verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature. [15] The Team learned of several examples of inappropriate

[14] See pages 10-11 of both the AKARNG and AKANG OCI Climate Surveys.

[15] Sexual Harassment is defined by National Guard policy as "a form of gender discrimination that involves unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when: (1) Submission to or rejection of such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of a person's job, pay, or career; or (2) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting that person; or (3) Such conduct interferes with an individual's performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment. Any person in a supervisory or command position who uses or condones implicit or explicit sexual behavior to control, influence, or affect the career, pay, or job of a military member or civilian employee is engaging in sexual harassment. Similarly, any military member or civilian employee who makes deliberate or repeated unwelcome verbal comments, gestures, or physical contact of a conduct of a sexual nature in its interviews with AKNG personnel, including a report of pictures of male genitalia drawn inside aircraft panels at an ANG Wing, flight instructors having sex with flight students, and senior leaders sending harassing and inappropriate text messages. Witnesses reported that AKNG internal inquiries into their complaints failed to substantiate the harassing behavior and as a result no action was taken. Indeed the information provided by the ANG Wings did not reflect that any administrative action occurred as a result of the complaints made.

The Team also learned that there were recent allegations of sexual harassment that had not been referred to EEO/EO; rather, the AKNG leadership was aware of these allegations, which were handled through internal investigation. Leaders should be directly involved in the EEO/EO program and they should collaborate with EEO/EO personnel to provide appropriate lawful recourse for both the complainant and the subject of the complaint. In several instances leaders attempted resolution without the assistance of EEO/EO personnel, this is not optimal. Service members interviewed by the Team perceived leadership efforts at internal resolution as an attempt to cover up sexual harassment allegations. This perception was reiterated in the OCI climate survey, which highlighted fear of reprisal and lack of support from the chain of command as the primary barriers to reporting discrimination.

2. Disparate Treatment

Disparate Treatment refers to intentional treatment of a person that is different than that provided to others based on one or more protected factors.[16] A large number (50+) of Puerto Rican Army National Guard members moved from Puerto Rico to Alaska to supplement the AKNG Military Police unit at Ft. Greely, AK. Several members discussed disparate treatment towards the Spanish-speaking members of this unit. They related that their leadership told Puerto Rican soldiers that they were not allowed to speak Spanish in the "operational" area, which some consider the entire installation. Under Army Policy, commanders may not require the use of English for personal sexual nature is also engaging in sexual harassment." NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

communications that are unrelated to military functions.[17] Command emphasis on the language issue has created a negative environment within the remote location, where members report that some military spouses are even posting derogatory comments about Spanish speaking spouses on social media sites.

There were are also concerns raised about providing medical care for families of service members assigned to Ft. Greely, specifically those with spouses from Puerto Rico. While medical care was a hot topic across the installation, either a lack of information or a lack of command attention created a rift among the former Puerto Rico National Guard members who believed they were receiving diminished medical support for their families because of their national origin. Several individuals interviewed at Ft. Greely stated they were required to provide medical documentation that their families are healthy due to the remoteness of the location, and that these documents were maintained in their personnel files which would impact their tour continuation.[18] They believed this requirement was unique to them based on their national origin, noting that local members of the AKNG were not required to file similar documentation. When the Team inquired with the S1 personnel at Ft Greely about medical documentation, they did not receive a clear response. The S1 himself was confused about the requirement.

Follow-up conversations with the AKNG J1, at JBER, clarified that Army policy requires service members to identify any special needs for family members for which adequate medical care may not be available at certain remote sites. [19] Although this conflicted with the broad requirement implemented at Ft Greely, the Team concluded that the practice was not intended to target certain categories of individuals and may be remedied through additional training.

[17] AR 600-20, paragraph 4-13, provides: "English is the operational language of the Army. Soldiers must maintain sufficient proficiency in English to perform their military duties. Their operational communication must be understood by everyone who has an official need to know their content, and, therefore, must normally be in English. However, commanders may not require Soldiers to use English unless such use is clearly necessary and proper for the performance of military functions."

3. Reprisal/Retaliation

Reprisal occurs when leaders take or threaten to take unfavorable action or withhold favorable action against a military member for making a protected statement, participating in a protected activity, or preparing a protected disclosure.

In order to prevent reprisal/retaliation from occurring, EEO/EO counselors and commanders are required by NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3 to provide the complainant and witnesses with a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan. This plan outlines what constitutes reprisal, covers the Military Whistleblower Protection Act, and outlines the possible consequences for a reprisal action.[20] The plan is to be completed with the assistance of EO professionals and given to the complainant and witnesses involved in EO cases. If used in accordance with regulations, the Reprisal Prevention Plan could eliminate the perception of retaliation and encourage members to come forward with their concerns.

The Team was informed by AKNG EEO/EO personnel that commanders were not completing these plans or advising witnesses of their concern regarding reprisal/retaliation with every new reported complaint. This fact may explain why the OCI survey revealed that one of the top reasons personnel do not report incidents of harassment/discrimination is due to fear of reprisal/retaliation.

[20] Reprisal is defined as by National Guard policy as "taking (or threatening to take) an unfavorable personnel action, or withholding (or threatening to withhold) a favorable personnel action for having engaged in a protected equal opportunity activity…" NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

4. EEO/EO Program Management

The AKNG SEEM is performing two roles within the AKNG Human Resources Office (HRO) – AGR Staffing Specialist and Equal Employment Manager. She shares her office with another officer and has no privacy. She does not directly report to the TAG; rather, she reports issues to the Chief of Human Resources, who accompanies her on all briefings regarding EEO/EO matters provided to the TAG. The AKNG SEEM does not perform site visits on a regular basis to the geographically-separated facilities (i.e., Ft Greely, 168th ARW or Clear AFS). Finally, the Team noted that the AKNG SEEM was behind in completing a mandatory EEO report,[21] which was due in March 2014.

The Team found the failure to track EEO/EO complaints and/or complete the regulatory reporting requirements may be perceived to demonstrate a lack of commitment to the EEO/EO program.

The Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG) Equal Opportunity Program is regulated by NGR 600-21, which requires a Human Resource Equal Opportunity Officer (HR/EO) at the JFHQ level and an Equal Opportunity Advisor (EOA) at every O-6 level of command; these individuals attend mandatory training at DEOMI. The AKARNG has had three different HR/EO's assigned in the past three years; the current individual is deployed for one year and has not been to DEOMI training. Per the aforementioned guidance, the AKARNG should have five trained EOAs; however, they currently have three EOAs, one of whom is leaving the service and one is currently deployed. This creates a problem for individuals who seek assistance with complaints of discrimination and for commanders trying to implement an effective program. Commanders simply cannot meet the mandatory EEO/EO training requirements without trained EOAs.

The Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG) Equal Opportunity Program is directed by ANGI 36-7. The Team interviewed an ANG Wing Military Equal Opportunity Officer (MEO) and EO NCOIC. Three informal reports were pending at the time of the Team's assessment. The Team learned that there were hostile climate issues within the AKANG, but that few people had come forward to file complaints. Interviews with members of both Wings reported a general pattern of inappropriate behavior that was not being addressed by the leadership. Allegations included the public display of nude pictures, sexual innuendo and inappropriate touching occurring within the workplace.

While funding to certify ARNG and ANG EEO/EO representatives through DEOMI or NGB-EO was available, overall support for the program was not evident to the Team at the various echelons of command. Several individuals interviewed expressed concern that the EEO/EO program is getting lost in the mix of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and Inspector General (IG) sensing sessions that were initiated by the AKNG at the request of the TAG to focus on climate issues (EO and SAPR were not participants in the IG sessions). They further believed that personnel are missing the underlying message regarding appropriate conduct in a professional environment.

Additionally witnesses stated that EEO/EO issues brought out during sensing sessions with the TAG and Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army are not forwarded to the AKNG SEEM for resolution; and that the SEEM does not review the command climate surveys being conducted and, as a consequence, cannot provide guidance to AKNG leadership on possible solutions to issues raised within these surveys.

C. Analysis of Fraud

The Team reviewed reported incidents of fraud that had occurred over the past 10 years. Most of the incidents involved the improper use of the government travel or purchase card. One incident involved the embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and another incident involved the misconduct of a senior officer who misused federal equipment and personnel for his own personal gain. In each instance the Team noted that there was a lack of oversight in the AKNG to prevent and detect fraud when it occurred.

The Team learned of recent concerns over program expenditures related to personnel and facilities that became the focus of a July 2013 internal review audit, which was scheduled at the request of the United States Property and Fiscal Officer (USPFO).[22] The audit reviewed the operational controls used to administer the federal operations and maintenance agreement and found that those controls were lacking.[23]

[22] DoD previously determined it was unable to provide federal funding directly to a state's Governor/Adjutant General because, as state officials, they could not be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds. Section 708 of

The audit recommended that the AKNG establish additional compensating controls and realign internal controls to increase federal oversight and control.[24] The audit also found that the Alaska Division of Military & Veterans Affairs (DMVA) altered the federal internal controls making AKNG operations reliant on DMVA's internal control system, which violated federal regulatory requirements.[25]

The internal review found that while the claims for reimbursement under the Cooperative Agreement were valid, the agreement lacked adequate internal controls.

Following the audit Alaska improved their system of accounting for the work performed.[26] However, the oversight of the federal program managers and the base civil engineers continues to be an issue. The Team was provided with a number of examples where program oversight was lacking due to the supervisory relationship

Title 32, United States Code, therefore established the position known as the United State Property & Fiscal Officer (USPFO), which can be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds within the National Guard of a particular state

[23] Under a standard Facilities Operations and Maintenance Activities appendix, the state employees are paid to perform identified jobs and their pay is covered under a cost share relationship between federal and state authorities, and the employees take technical direction from Federal Program Managers for management of priorities, time, and funding accountability. According to the audit, in AK the state employees are managed through a consolidated labor pool. In theory this arrangement could result in cost savings. However, it relies on accurate accounting mechanisms and oversight to ensure that work is being performed and reimbursed which the audit found to be insufficient. The audit noted that the Federal Program Manager was responsible for an activity over which he had limited control noting, "The Federal Program Manager's role has been diminished to an extent that reasonable assurance may not be determined by the Federal Program Manager without additional compensating controls being implemented." AK ANG Audit FY13.

[24] The DMVA (State of Alaska) now submits a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that shows how personnel costs are being charged and access to the real-time payroll database. This allows the Base Civil Engineer (BCE) and Facilities manager the ability to review input to ensure that personnel are not being charged to other accounts for the same time or service.

[26] The State is now required to submit a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that illustrates how personnel costs are being charged; ensuring individuals are not being charged to multiple accounts for the same service.

between state and federal employees and the centralized employment pool. Examples included the scheduling of leave without coordinating with the base civil engineer which interfered with federal project accomplishment through operational delay. Additionally, in one instance a state employee attempted to lease federal property to a state agency without proper federal coordination. The matter was reported to the federal program manager just in time for them to intervene, but the incident exemplified the lack of oversight in this area. Increased oversight and adequate internal controls are essential to the detection and prevention of fraud in the future.

D. Analysis of Coordination with Law Enforcement

The Team noted the AKNG did not track matters referred to local law enforcement for disposition. When information regarding referred matters was requested by the Team, the information had to be pulled together by personnel familiar with the allegations, or via connections to local law enforcement entities. The resulting civilian dispositions of the referred actions were varied. In some cases no formal charges were made and the conduct which gave rise to the investigation went unaddressed. Had these cases been tracked and the information regarding the misconduct been received by the command, the leadership would have been able to monitor the disposition of the alleged misconduct by local law enforcement and may have been able to take more timely appropriate disciplinary action where a nexus between the conduct and military good order and discipline existed.

The Team met with federal and state local law enforcement personnel in Anchorage to discuss misconduct within the AKNG. Additionally, the Team spoke telephonically with state law enforcement investigators throughout the state.

Improved lines of communication with law enforcement will improve good order and discipline within the AKNG

The Anchorage Police noted they do not inquire whether or not the subject of an investigation is a member of the AKNG as a matter of course, and while service members are nominally required to report to their command if they are arrested, there is no mechanism in place that would ensure this actually occurs. As a result, commanders may be unaware of misconduct committed by some service members outside of military installations.

The Team discussed with the AK law enforcement personnel the possibility of annotating when military personnel are investigated. It was determined that an additional data field could be added to the standard AK police report, although such action would be a change in their normal business practice.

The Team met with Army CID to discuss prior AKNG allegations that they had investigated. These included investigations of sexual assault, drug sales and trafficking of federal weapons, all of which were closed due to lack of sufficient evidence. Though significant numbers of AKNG personnel in Anchorage perform duties on a federal installation, there is little coordination or information sharing between the Active Component military and the AKNG.

The Team noted that several of the service members interviewed were under investigation by law enforcement, and at least one was serving probation while serving in an active duty status. This creates a perception that the AKNG leadership is either unaware or unconcerned about misconduct that is occurring in the ranks. Several witnesses perceived that while leadership was aware of misconduct, they have allowed members to serve because the operational mission is more important than the quality of the force or because of the wrongdoer's personal connections to the leadership.

E. Analysis of AKNG Misconduct

To assess misconduct within the AKNG, the Team requested copies of all reported misconduct and subsequent disposition (administrative and criminal) for the AKNG full-time and part-time personnel over the past 10 years. In analyzing the information provided by the AKNG, there were 494 reports of misconduct, of which 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, 62 cases were alcohol-related violations (such as DUI), 37 cases involved sexual assault (17 were unrestricted), 64 cases were reported as civilian criminal misconduct (such as assault), 15 cases were designated as general misconduct, 24 cases were EO-related, 3 cases involved fraud, and 27 other cases involved military misconduct. The Team noted there was a lack of consistency in the tracking of various cases that are reported to the command; there is also a lack of consistent punishment for like offenses.

With regard to matters that primarily involved the AKARNG, most allegations of misconduct were investigated pursuant to Army Regulation 15-6. Allegations involving AKANG members were typically investigated by Commander-Directed Investigations (CDI) pursuant to the SAF IG CDI Guide.[27] With the exception of the alleged embezzlement of funds from the AKNG family programs fund in 2011, specific allegations of fraud were internally reviewed. While several instances of misconduct were investigated by the applicable MCIO or local law enforcement, there was little evidence that the AKNG maintained situational awareness of these matters. At the time of the Team's assessment, some matters were still being reviewed by local law enforcement and/or the Federal Bureau of Investigation and, therefore, were not the subject of substantive review by the Team.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the AKNG Recruiting and Retention Command. Several command directed investigations initiated in 2012 found that, during the time period of 2008-2009, several non-commissioned officers within this command were engaged in misuse of government vehicles, fraud, adultery, inappropriate relationships and sexual assault. Several of these cases are pending administrative action.

The Team's interviews conducted with the FBI, CID and local law enforcement revealed that the Recruiting and Retention Command had been the target of multiple investigations for crimes such as weapons smuggling, rape, and drug trafficking; however, none of these investigations resulted in prosecution of the crimes under investigation due to jurisdictional issues or lack of evidence.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the Recruiting and Retention Command 2008-2009. Some of this misconduct is now the subject of administrative action.

The Team learned that during the time period investigated, the Recruiting and Retention Command commander reported directly to the AK TAG. This was a deviation from the normal reporting chain of AKNG units in comparison to both his predecessor and successor in command. This arrangement may not be optimal.

Recruiting and retention is strongly emphasized in the AKNG. Successful leaders are measured by their ability to both recruit and retain personnel. In some cases within the AKANG, promotions were tied to recruiting and retention numbers (e.g., unit vacancy promotion could not be utilized unless the Wing was at 95% strength). Additionally, high operational tempo requires the availability of all hands to support ongoing operations in AK. This created a perception that quantity was valued over quality, creating a disincentive to remove problem personnel who were otherwise operationally capable employees. Some Army and Air National Guard witnesses testified that when they approached the leadership regarding misconduct, they were specifically told to stand down.

The Recruiting and Retention commander was reported to be the TAG's friend and neighbor, creating a perception that this commander was invulnerable. This led to questions of the TAG's potential bias and favoritism toward the commander. The Team did not investigate the validity of these allegations.[28]

The Team reviewed a prior investigation into allegations of inappropriate contact between a recruiting member and a student at local high school involved with the JROTC program. The Team conducted several interviews with high school administrators to evaluate these programs but found no known current deficiencies within the program. The school's administration appeared to be generally satisfied with the JROTC and recruiting programs and was unaware of any misconduct.

F. Command Climate Survey

The Team conducted a Command Climate Survey using DEOCS, a Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute based survey tool, from 1 April 2014 until 1 June 2014. The AKNG has a total of 3954 assigned personnel; Army - 1913 and Air - 2041. A total of 1011 personnel or 25.5% of the AKNG completed the OCI Command Climate Survey; Army – 541 at 28.2% and Air – 470 at 23.02%. The Team was told by numerous individuals that they had participated in multiple surveys during the past year and that they were suffering from survey fatigue. The Team learned that there were surveys from commanders, the IG, the NGB Diversity Office, major commands and various other organizations.

[28]According to AR 20-1 paragraph 7-1l, commanders or IGs must forward directly to the Department of the Army Inspector General's Investigations Division, through IG channels, any and all allegations of impropriety or misconduct (including criminal allegations) against senior officials—defined as general officers (including ARNGUS, USAR, and retired general officers), promotable colonels, and SES civilians—within 2 working days of receipt.

1. Climate Survey: Sexual Assault and Safe Environments

While the intent of command climate survey is to provide information to commanders that they can use to improve their command, the Team did not intend to share the results of the survey until after the Team's assessment was complete. However the survey was shared with the AKNG leadership as part of DEOMI's normal protocol. Individuals that participated should report any concerns of retaliation as a result of their candid participation in the survey to NGB-JA/OCI.

The OCI climate survey included several questions regarding Sexual Assault, perceptions of safety, and the overall Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Within the AKANG, a significant number of respondents perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, citing social retaliation, lack of confidence in the leadership and military justice, and lack of privacy which reflects a lack of trust within the command (See Table 1-1). Members of the AKARNG also perceived barriers to reporting sexual assaults, citing lack of confidence in their command and lack of confidence in the military justice system (See Tables 1 and 2).

When asked who can or cannot receive a restricted report of sexual assault, more than 25% of respondents answered that Criminal Investigators or Military Police were able to accept a Restricted Report, which is incorrect. This information indicates that, while the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program is being briefed to soldiers and airmen, there is still confusion when it comes too restricted vs. unrestricted reporting options.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

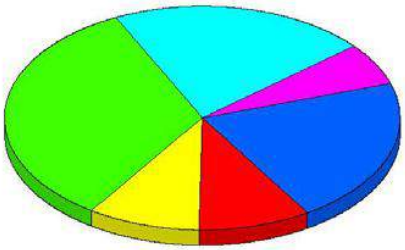
2. Climate Survey: Perceptions of Discrimination

The climate survey reflects 200 incidents of perceived discrimination or sexual harassment during the past twelve months.[29] Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy. Retaliation, gender-based (sexual) harassment and discrimination based on national origin were ranked high among the soldiers and airmen who responded. Of the AKARNG respondents faced with the question, "Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization," 37 said they had been retaliated against, 29 indicated that they had been harassed based on gender and 28 claimed discrimination based on race/national origin.

Respondents to the OCI Survey revealed 200 incidents of perceived discrimination and sexual harassment during the past twelve months. Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy.



Although the AKANG numbers were significantly lower overall, the same areas of concern were highlighted; 11 respondents stated they were harassed based on gender (sex), nine perceived retaliation, six respondents reported discrimination based on religion and five respondents reported discrimination based on race/national origin. A total of 26 men and 14 women responded that they were harassed based on gender. When queried "Did you report any of the incidents of discrimination to someone in your organization," 57 of those that responded did not report the incident to anyone; 35 members stated the barriers to their reporting included "Fear of reprisal," followed by 27 stating "Lack of support from command."

3. Trusting the Leadership

The survey included several areas designed to evaluate: Organizational Effectiveness, Trust in Leadership, and Unit Cohesion. Ten locally-developed questions were asked to evaluate the different echelons of AKNG command. The survey results indicate a lack of trust within the leadership of the AKNG. The organizational effectiveness factors chart reflects male officers and senior enlisted members of the Air Wings and Units fall behind the national average for trusting leadership to manage their organization. The same chart reflects a lack of trust of leadership at all levels of the AKNG.

Overall, the survey reveals a perception of lack of leadership integrity within all levels of command, to include handling of disciplinary actions, favoritism, and communication as well as issues regarding the results from various selection boards.

There is a perception that individuals who file complaints will be exposed to retaliation; 23% of individuals who participated in the survey stated they had been exposed to this behavior. When asked "What are the Barriers to Reporting Discrimination," 35% of respondents stated they would not report based on fear of reprisal. The Team interprets this to mean that soldiers and airmen are truly concerned by what they have witnessed in the organization.

35% of Survey respondents stated they would not report discrimination based on fear of reprisal.

The responses to the OCI Command Climate Survey were consistent with the comments made in the 22 other surveys provided to the Team for review. While these surveys were being conducted at the unit level, this indicates that the issues addressed above should not be new to the leadership. When properly utilized, climate surveys assist the commanders in identifying and reinforcing practices where they have succeeded in meeting or exceeding the national average. Issues where the unit falls below the national average, however, should be treated as an organizational concern that should be identified and addressed.

V. Additional Matters

Though not specifically identified in the Governor's request for an assessment, the Team identified the following additional matters in the AKNG that have contributed to the issues that gave rise to this inquiry.

A. Administration and Management of Justice

Most of the AKNG officers and senior enlisted members cited the inaccessibility of adequate military justice advice as a major barrier to effectively addressing misconduct, with the focus resting squarely on the Joint Force Headquarter Staff Judge Advocate (JFHQ SJA) who serves as the senior National Guard attorney and TAG's personal legal advisor for AKNG matters. Witnesses found her confusing and frustrating to deal with. They reported that questions provided to her were either left unanswered or the answers were so convoluted that they were of little value. While no one questioned her intelligence, personal commitment to the AKNG, or dedication to an ethical climate, they often questioned her legal advice; as a result, they reported to the Team that they and others avoided the JFHQ SJA altogether.

The JFHQ SJA had no apparent case tracking system. There was a handwritten log designed to track requests for legal review, but the legal staff did not routinely monitor its use. The log evidenced receipt, but no disposition, of just one administrative discharge action within the preceding four years. Additionally, the JFHQ had no visibility on the Army or Air National Guard legal matters, despite the fact that several of these matters would ultimately involve TAG action. Several witnesses described requests for legal review that often went unanswered. Additionally, the JFHQ SJA does not provide supervision or oversight over Army or Air matters.

The Team learned that the JFHQ SJA recently had coordinated with the State of Washington's SJA office to provide legal review of a number of AKNG Army investigations. Although impartiality was cited as the reason for the request, this further distanced the JFHQ SJA from the performance of actual legal support to AKNG units.

The AKNG operates over a very large geographic area and the limited number of JAs, both Army and Air, is not optimal. Increasing the number of JAs should lead to enhanced good order and discipline.

Notwithstanding the issues within the JFHQ SJA legal office, the quality of the Judge Advocate (JA) team is very high; recently, the AKARNG hired a full time, dual status military technician to provide daily legal support. This junior officer is currently managing several high visibility disciplinary boards and is very capable, yet significantly overworked. His military supervisor, the ARNG State SJA (a part-time guardsman), was taking appropriate steps to provide technical oversight; however, he is unable to provide hands-on assistance. In addition, the AKARNG does not participate in the Army National Guard's Trial Defense Counsel Program, and as a result relies on JAs from the lower 48 states to provide defense counsel when administrative action occurs.

The Team noted that, although there was an increase in misconduct that occurred at Ft Greely, there was no local part-time SJA assigned to assist the leadership at that location. While one JA was physically present on Ft Greely in his civilian capacity during weekdays, he commutes several hours to JBER on weekends to serve as a JA. Accordingly, legal support to Ft Greely, provided remotely, was less than optimal.

The Air National Guard JAs function as self-contained Wings at JBER (176 WG) and Eielson AFB (168 ARW). The 168 ARW maintains the Air National Guard component's only geographically separated unit (GSU) – the 213 SWS at Clear Air Force Station (AFS). Despite the fact that both Wings maintain robust 24/7/365 Title 10 and Title 32 operational missions, the Wings only have part-time JA positions authorized. There are two JAs at the 168 ARW neither of which currently practices law outside their Air National Guard positions; as such, they are generally accessible between drills. At the 176th WG the SJA is a highly-qualified but with his civilian employment he has little time between drills to tend to the Wing's operational and administrative demands. A new JA fills the deputy SJA position and, upon return from training, his presence should greatly assist in the swift processing of actions. Other then volume of work, there did not appear to be tracking problems or unique challenges for the JAs within the Air National Guard Wings.

The AKNG members serving in a Title 32 or State Active Duty Status are subject to state criminal law. For an analysis of Justice in the Military see Appendix C. Alaska's Code of Military Justice (ACMJ) expressly withholds jurisdiction for any crime that can be tried by civil authorities.[30] Therefore, "common law" crimes such as rape, indecent exposure/touching, and all other assaults cannot be criminally prosecuted under the ACMJ – but must instead be referred to civilian authorities. This leaves only inherently military offenses – such as insubordination, malingering, asleep at post, drunk on duty to be tried by military courts martial under the ACMJ. As a result, AKNG commanders instead rely upon administrative action to address misconduct.

Commanders currently have the ability to administratively separate, demote, and issue reprimands to enlisted members.[31] There are few administrative measures available to address officers involved in misconduct. The most common tool used in AK was the letter of reprimand with an occasional withdrawal of federal recognition as the only real and immediate consequence for officer misconduct.[32] The Team noted a general lack of understanding regarding the permanency of officially filed letters of reprimand; as a result, several letters that had been permanently filed were erroneously removed from officer's personnel files in contradiction to Army and National Guard policy.[33] Meanwhile other locally filed letters of reprimand with an annotated expiration date of 2-3 years should have been removed, but they were still in the service members' personnel files at the time of the assessment.

Administrative Action is the primary tool for commanders to restore order and discipline within their ranks but it must be swift and it must be lawful. As the processing of what appeared to the Team to be routine administrative matters lagged so did the confidence in the State Judge Advocate. The climate survey reflected this concern with 28% of the AKANG and 42% of the AKARNG respondents listing "lack of confidence in the military justice system" as a barrier to reporting sexual assault.

B. Ethical Misconduct

The Team reviewed multiple allegations of ethical misconduct by commissioned and noncommissioned officers in the AKNG. As senior leader ethics continue to be a predominant concern across the Department of [33] AR 600-37, paragraphs 7-1 and 7-2, provide that appeals and petitions for removal of unfavorable information be directed to the Department of the Army Suitability and Evaluation Board (DASEB) for action, States cannot unilaterally elect to remove information regardless of what the letter states or the officer giving the letter intended. The subject of the letter has the burden to provide evidence of a clear and convincing nature that the allegations are untrue or unjust, in whole or in part, thereby warranting removal. See also ARNG-HRZ Memorandum for Military personnel Management Officers of All States DTD 29 July 2013 Authority for Removal of IPERMs Documents (PPOM #13-028).

Defense, the Team examined leadership behavior and met with the Department of the Army Inspector General (DAIG) to review prior investigative findings as they related to the AKNG leadership.

The climate survey and interviews conducted by the Team highlighted a lack of trust of the leadership based on perceived instances of favoritism and bias by the senior leadership when responding to substantiated allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraud.

As one example, the DAIG substantiated violations of federal ethical standards by a former AKNG official. The DAIG found that, over a period of several years, the officer had inappropriately used government vehicles, to include helicopters, for personal use. The Team was also informed that this same official had improperly interrogated a victim of sexual assault and exercised bias in the administration of personnel matters. Many individuals interviewed by the Team blamed the current TAG for failing to take administrative action against the former AKNG official after learning of the DAIG findings against the officer.[34]

Substantiated complaints made against one officer resulted in no administrative action; the officer retired at his current rank and, upon retirement, was awarded the Legion of Merit.

The Team reviewed three voluminous investigations conducted at Ft. Greely regarding allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraternization.[35] At JBER the Team received information that multiple individuals within the JFHQ were engaged in inappropriate relationships, were involved in adulterous

[34] Available administrative remedies would have included but not be limited to Withdrawal of Federal Recognition or Grade Determination Board.

[35] Air Force Instruction 36-2909, paragraph 5, provides: "Unprofessional relationships between officers and enlisted members have a high potential for damaging morale and discipline and for compromising the standing of officers. Consequently, officers have an ethical and a legal obligation to avoid certain relationships and activities. Officers must not engage in any activity with an enlisted member that reasonably may prejudice good order and discipline, discredit the armed forces or compromise an officer's standing. The custom against fraternization in the Air Force extends beyond organizational and chain of command lines. In short, it extends to all officer/enlisted relationships." Army policy requires Commanders "seek to prevent inappropriate or unprofessional relationships through proper training and Leadership by example." AR 600-20, paragraph 4-14f.) Accordingly, commanders have the authority and the responsibility to maintain good order, discipline and morale within their units.

affairs, and that some members solicited other members, regardless of position or rank.

Interviews with senior leaders about these allegations revealed they were often aware of the allegations; however, the TAG believed that the AKNG was "not the morality police." Therefore, allegations of inappropriate conduct were not addressed until the conduct rose to the level that necessitated leadership involvement. Some individuals asserted that leadership only took action when individuals involved fell out of favor with the current leadership. The Team noted that, while commanders and other officers or senior enlisted members had been reprimanded for inappropriate relationships or behavior, they were typically allowed to retire at their current grade or simply relocated within the AKNG for continued service. One officer, who had been reprimanded twice for fraternization and adultery, is currently the subject of a reported sexual assault.

VI. Findings

A. Finding 1: Sexual Assault. The current AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well organized but lacks the trust of victims due to their lack of confidence in the command.

1) The Team found there was a clear lapse in appropriate military victim services prior to 2012. There were several instances where victim complaints were not properly documented, victims did not receive accurate information regarding their reporting options, victims were not referred to victim advocates, confidentiality was not provided, and in some cases the victims were ostracized by their leaders, peers and units.

2) The Team found that all of the victims that have reported assault through the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program since 2012 appear to have been properly advised as to the availability of services and have been referred, when permitted, to law enforcement entities for investigation. Additionally, medical and counseling services, both military and civilian, have been made available to all documented National Guard victims of sexual assault since 2006.

3) The Team found continued improvement is needed in the following four areas:

a. Protection of victim's confidential information – Victims had reported instances where their confidential information was discussed publically and instances where information regarding their assault was provided in such a manner that they could be, and in some cases were, easily identified as the victims.

b. Offender Accountability – Victims interviewed stated they lacked confidence that their leadership would pursue disciplinary action in their case and reviews of disciplinary actions supported their conclusion.

c. Leadership understanding of Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative options - Victims that had worked with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator were generally satisfied with the support they were receiving from the program, but many were concerned about reprisal from their command and described instances where their command over reached, re-victimizing them in the process.

d. Knowledge of sexual assault reporting options - Individuals that participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

Finding 2: EEO/EO Programs. The AKNG Leadership failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program

1) The Team found that the lack of senior leadership support weakened the AKNG understanding of the EEO/EO policies and resulted in the inconsistent handling of EEO/EO complaints by leaders across the AKNG, which has contributed to the perception that leaders do not support EEO/EO policies and may engage in reprisal. Command emphasis is critical to provide a forum to address complaints and develop preventative programs to prevent future complaints from occurring.

2) This finding is broken down further as follows:

a. The Senior Leadership is not providing sufficient support for the EEO/EO program. State National Guard EEO/EO programs must include a well trained and accessible State Equal Employment Manager with strong leadership emphasis and support. The Team noted that the EEO/EO program within the organization was not well integrated within their units. Many of the EEO/EO offices were located in areas that were not easily accessible or lacked confidentiality and lacked appropriate contact information when unavailable, thereby inhibiting complaints.[36]

b. The State Equal Employment Manager was not actively managing the EEO/EO program and was not providing oversight as required by NGB policy. The Team noted that the State Equal Employment Manager did not have direct access to the TAG and other levels of command, which resulted in missed opportunities to foster regular discussion of and attention to EEO/EO matters within the workplace.

[36] The Team noted that the 176th MEO Office was hard to find, there were no posters directing personnel, and due to its location inside an old commissary building with the ANG LRS unit it provided little confidentiality for the few that sought EO assistance.

(i) Pursuant to NGR 600-22, the State Equal Employment Manager is the custodian of record for discrimination complaint files and related records. The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager appeared to be unaware of most of the complaints that had been made across the state. The OCI Command Climate Survey revealed that, of the 200 incidents wherein respondents reported they had been the subject of harassment/discrimination in the past year, only 35 actually made a report of harassment or discrimination and the State Equal Employment Manager only had documentation for three of these incidents.

(ii) The Team received multiple reports during their onsite interviews of sexual harassment and discrimination that had not been reported to EEO/EO program managers. In some cases the leadership was familiar with the issues but, as no formal complaints had been filed, they were not seeking resolution or prioritizing efforts to address the overall climate. As a result, the issues persisted without leadership intervention.

(iii) Without active monitoring, emphasis, and oversight the EEO/EO managers were unable to gain leadership support for training and resources and the State Equal Employment Manager was unable to identify any trends or problems that required leadership attention.

c. The AKNG EEO/EO program does not have sufficient number of personnel to meet the requirements for the program as established under current policy.

(i) Pursuant to NGB 600-21, the ARNG must have one Human Resources Employment Officer (HR EO) who runs the ARNG program on the part-time state side and one Equal Opportunity Advisor per 0-6 level of command; all of which must be Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute trained. There was a great deal of turnover in the HR EO position and the current HR EO, who lacks requisite DEOMI training, is currently deployed. In the ARNG there are five 0-6 level commands, however only three EOAs are assigned, one of which is currently pending adverse administrative action.

(ii) Pursuant to Air Force Instruction 36-2706, each Air National Guard Wing is required to have an Equal Opportunity Director (officer) and a NCOIC with support provided to the geographically separated units.

Additionally, Military Employment Opportunity (MEO) program managers should not be assigned additional duties that interfere with their MEO responsibilities. In the AKNG there are two Air National Guard Wings and one geographically isolated unit. The Team found that while they met the staffing requirement, the Wings were not supporting their geographically isolated unit. Additionally, the MEO at one Wing was commuting quarterly from Virginia; and prior to that, from Korea making her inaccessible to service members during standard drill periods, when a complainant would have the opportunity to make their complaint or seek assistance.

d. Finally, AKNG Service members do not trust that their leadership will properly address EEO/EO complaints. OCI command climate survey respondents and witnesses interviewed communicated this to the Team during interviews. Thirty five Survey respondents had not filed a complaint due to "fear of reprisal" and twenty seven respondents stated "lack of support from command" as the primary barriers to reporting. When interviewed, the EEO/EO program managers admitted they did not enforce the requirement that leadership complete the Command Reprisal Prevention Plan as required by NGB policy and did not discuss actions that could be considered reprisal with the unit commander.

C. Finding 3: Coordination with Law Enforcement. The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate the coordination of AKNG service member misconduct with local law enforcement.

1) Without an established coordination relationship, commanders do not have information regarding new and ongoing cases of criminal misconduct. In some cases this lack of knowledge allowed service members to remain on full time operational orders while they were under criminal investigation by local law enforcement. This reinforced the perception that the AKNG leadership was unconcerned with the misconduct, and as a result fewer reports of misconduct were made.

2) Interviews revealed that commanders either relied on information provided to them by the offender or scanned open source materials such as Alaska Court System CourtView online, a web based record of AK court matters, to gather updated information about their service members. This is not an adequate substitute for coordination with local law enforcement.

D. Finding 4: Fraud. The AKNG had several instances where fraud had occurred as well as a perception of fraud occurring at the facilities level; however, this fraud was not found to have impacted the reporting of sexual assault.

1) The Team notes that fraudulent and unethical behavior leads to a lack of confidence and trust in senior leadership, and this is a key component to victim reporting behavior. There were two specific instances where well-known fraudulent activity had occurred, neither of which were connected to sexual misconduct. The issues were investigated by organizations outside of the AKNG, and some level of administrative action and or criminal prosecution had occurred. In both instances, there was a perception that senior leaders either endorsed or neglected actions that allowed the fraud to occur. The Team notes, however, that the AKNG has demonstrated an improved emphasis to target fraud which was evident in their active internal review program which detects and prevents fraudulent activity.

2) The Team also found there is currently a concern over the management of state employees under the cooperative agreement's Facilities Operations and Maintenance Agreement (FOMA) and a perception that the lack of federal oversight violated federal law and policy. The Team reviewed the internal review that was conducted on the Alaska Air National Guard in 2013 which specifically addressed the above areas as issues that needed to be corrected and called for "attributable" controls to be put in place. Interviews with the USPFO revealed that the recommendations have been largely implemented and that the current accounting system is now auditable. However, the Team lacked the subject matter expertise to ensure that these changes are being implemented.

E. Finding 5: Command Climate. The climate survey highlighted the fact that actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding the trust and confidence in the leadership of the AKNG.

1) The Team found that some of the AKNG senior leadership lacked a true open door policy.[37] An open door policy is meant to encourage subordinate members to raise issues or concerns they have which they believe they cannot address within their current chain of command. The open door policy is generally published and available for members in the unit to view. The Team noted that in some instances the open door policy required the service member to schedule the meeting through their current leadership, or it provided that once scheduled the meeting would include their current leadership. While each commander sets his own open door policies, this practice was counterproductive as members reported they were dissuaded from raising issues they believed they could not resolve within the command. Additionally, as is traditionally the case, the senior leader's policy will inform the junior leader's policy which has had a cascading effect upon the force in Alaska.

2) The Team found that the AKNG does not have a strong mentoring program. Junior commanders stated they did not receive senior level guidance or mentoring and that there was no venue available that would encourage the sharing of ideas and information and to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. This was also true within the different support organizations such as personnel, legal, and EEO/EO.

3) The Team found there was a perception that the members of the Recruiting and Retention Command received preferential treatment. There was a history of reports of criminal misconduct coming from the Recruiting and Retention Command which was not timely investigated creating an impression for several witnesses of favoritism, bias, complacency, or delay of justice. The AKNG leadership had received complaints in 2010 of criminal activity that included inappropriate relationships, fraudulent use of government equipment, adultery and sexual assault. These allegations were not investigated by the AKNG until December 2012. Individuals involved in this misconduct are currently the subject of several disciplinary boards. Though many individuals interviewed were aware of the recent disciplinary boards, witnesses expressed doubt that the TAG will approve results that recommend unfavorable action against members of this command.

4) The Team also found there is a lack of transparency in the personnel management system. Members interviewed were confused about the various promotion requirements and roles of various senior leaders in the process. Additionally, there was no structured mentoring program or regular command/special branch meetings that would provide a venue to discuss misconduct, EO/EEO, promotions, appropriate ethical conduct, etc. In the absence of such a venue, junior leaders and advisors are not receiving the leadership emphasis needed for personnel programs (such as EEO\EO) and are not benefiting from the experience of their leaders which has adversely impacted the perceptions of junior and senior leaders. Many interviewees perceived that favoritism was occurring, when in many cases appropriate and thoughtful personnel decisions were being made.

5) The Team found there was a perception that the AKNG leadership, to include the TAG, were engaged in ethical and moral misconduct and therefore they lacked the moral high ground to take appropriate action when disciplinary matters arose. This perception was articulated during personal interviews and documented in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The Team, however, does not have the authority to investigate misconduct by senior government officials (O-6 promotable and general officers) as such, all allegations were referred to the appropriate service investigative body. While the Team did not investigate these allegations, the Team found the allegations pervasive; as a result, whether the allegations are accurate or not, this perception must be addressed in order to restore faith and confidence in the AKNG leadership.

6) The "Overall Unit Summary" in the OCI Command Climate Survey shows the AKNG falls at or below the National Guard average in most of the categories assessed. Notwithstanding these numbers, the survey does not reflect a broken AKNG, merely one that needs administrative and "corporate culture" improvement while maintaining its current high level of operational capability. Issues remain regarding fear of reprisal, lack of accountability and lack of confidence in the AKNG leadership based on the interviews conducted and documentation collected by the Team.

7) The Team found that AKNG commanders are not providing consistent support to victims of discrimination and sexual assault. Several victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment stated they were ostracized by their unit after reporting their experience. Many of these victims continue to receive counseling because of the reprisal they believe they experienced. The failure to properly train and document reprisal, noted previously in the findings related to EO/EEO, greatly undermined the effective response of commanders.

VII. Additional Findings Regarding the Administration of Justice

The Team finds the AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct. While the administration of justice and personnel management is a command responsibility, several of the delays involved in the processing of administrative actions were directly attributed to AKNG management of legal support.

Due to challenges associated with the prosecution of offenses under the Alaska Code of Military Justice (ACMJ), commanders rely solely on administrative measures or tools to maintain order and discipline within their force. [38] In the AKNG, all of these tools appear to be used more or less appropriately, with two exceptions: removal from the AGR program and administrative discharges. The Team noted long delays and reluctance to use both AGR removal and administrative discharge processes.

The Team assessed each of the following as contributing to these problems: weak discipline imposed upon the force; a forgiving command climate; overly cautious and inexperienced commanders; a lack of experience in processing actions by subordinate commanders; and a lack of available legal counsel to advise commanders and investigating officers (IOs) or to conduct timely legal reviews for approval and imposition. Additionally there was a lack of an adequate action-tracking mechanism.[39]

Justice is both a senior leader and a SJA issue. Many of the delays the Team found seemed to be attributable to the office of the SJA and the chronic lack of staff with the mission of supporting what is in many regards an operational full-time force. Dating back to 2006, the Team found several examples of substandard members who were properly processed for administrative discharge, only to have discharge actions delayed indefinitely,

[38] These tools generally include: informal counseling; a written letter of counseling (LOC) or reprimand (LOR); annotating misconduct on a member's evaluation/performance report; withholding or delaying (or modifying) promotions; change in duty assignments, shift assignments or transfers; administrative demotion; removing active guard/reserve (AGR) members from their full-time orders; and, finally, administrative separation from the National Guard.

[39] The Director of the Joint Staff recently developed a tracking system and was holding monthly boards to gain better oversight increased awareness along these lines will improve her efforts.

unexecuted, re-characterized or re-examined by senior leadership. While senior leaders have the authority to take final action, which includes modifying final dispositions when they deem appropriate, there appeared to be a lack of transparency in these decisions, thereby undermining the integrity of the process.

Much of the delay in administrative discharge processing appears to be intertwined with state-imposed requirements which impede the processing of early termination of AGR orders.[40] When a National Guard member is recommended for removal from the AGR program, the member is entitled to due process. In many of the other states the member is given just a few days to respond – specifically, seven days in the ANG component and fifteen days in the ARNG component. If the member responds to contest the proposed removal, TAG decides whether or not removal/curtailment is appropriate. In the Air components, the member may appeal (again, to TAG), but the separation proceeds.

The AKNG's inability to utilize this force management tool is directly attributed to the Alaska Supreme Court case of State v. Bowen, 953 P.2d 888 (Alaska 1998). As a result of this case, the JFHQ SJA has advised commanders and unit-level judge advocates that whenever a member's misconduct is of sufficient severity that discharge is also warranted, a single, combined "adversarial hearing" should be held. This level of process requires lengthy delays to convene a hearing, during which time the member continues receiving a federal paycheck. As a consequence, these members, accused of misconduct, continue to perform duties, often with little more than "make-work" or "do-nothing" assignments. The Team heard very clearly from a number of interviewees that this perceived inability to remove full-time AGR members is hurting morale within the AKNG, creating a toxic work environment.

The team reviewed this case and recommends that the AK Attorney General's Office render an opinion, in coordination with the NGB Office of the [40] Under both Army National Guard regulation (NGR 600-5) and Air National Guard instruction (ANGI 36-101), probationary AGR members (generally those with fewer than six years' AGR service and less than 18 years total active federal military service, or TAFMS) are more easily removed than career AGR members (six or more years AGR or more than 18 years TAFMS); but career members may nonetheless be involuntary removed for cause whenever the facts and circumstances of their misconduct warrant removal.

VIII. Recommendations

The Team makes recommendations to address the specific findings that have been addressed. Additionally, the Team makes separate recommendations for the administration of justice in the AKNG.

A. Recommendation 1: Sexual Assault. The Team has seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the AKNG.

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Continue the education of AKNG service members on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program, to include the availability of resources, advocates, counsel and information regarding confidential reporting options,

2) Improve the reporting process to ensure victims' information is kept confidential.

3) Ensure action taken in each of the cases investigated is shared with the victim through the VA program. Specific guidance is outlined and required by DoDI 6495.02.

4) Develop ways to provide transparent and informed justice regarding sexual assault matters, as well as other misconduct, to shift the culture from acceptance to accountability.

5) Reinforce leadership education on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative resources available to the command.

6) Set the tone for sexual assault and harassment awareness by strengthening the policies that are meant to educate soldiers and airmen about respect and responsibility for one another.

7) The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator needs to reinforce training on reporting options with special emphasis on who can take a restricted report. Individuals that participated in the Team survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the SAPR program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

B. Recommendation 2: EO Programs. The Team has five separate recommendations to improve the AKNG Equal Employment Opportunity program

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Reinforce the AKNG EEO/EO program to ensure individuals understand options in regards to privileged communications and protection from retaliation; visibly increasing leadership support is paramount.

2) Ensure their AKNG EEO/EO program includes well-trained and accessible EO Program participants. The SEEM must have direct access to TAG or the other levels of command in order to facilitate a discussion regarding EO within the workplace. Additionally, the EEO/EO program must be incorporated into leadership discussions such as the monthly Sexual Assault Review Board (SARB) in order to facilitate the exchange of information relevant to combating sexual assault and harassment.

3) Ensure the AKNG EEO/EO program meets or exceeds the personnel requirements for the program as established under current policy and that all EEO/EO personnel are trained and certified in accordance with Service guidelines. The Team further recommends that an EOA position be formally established at Ft Greely. Although Ft Greely is not an O-6 level command which would require a separate EOA, due to their remote location and the issues identified by the Team as highlighted in the analysis regarding disparate treatment, continued EO representation at that location is warranted.

4) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to receive additional training on her roles and responsibilities in order to improve current program oversight and case tracking.

5) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to conduct additional training on EEO/EO complaints management for senior leaders that includes training on creating a Command Reprisal Prevention Plan.

C. Recommendation 3. Coordination with Law Enforcement.

The Team recommends that all allegations of misconduct under investigation by local law enforcement be tracked by the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer. Additionally when appropriate, the Staff Judge Advocate should make recommendations for administrative action pending the finding of local law enforcement officials, to include removal from the AGR program.

D. Recommendation 4: Fraud.

The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG. Regarding the theft and misuse of federal resources by service members, the Team recommends that the AKNG continue its efforts to combat fraud through its current Internal Review program.

E. Recommendation 5: Climate. The Team has seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's assessment and through the OCI Command Climate Survey.

The AKNG Leadership needs to:

1) Review their open door policies across the command to ensure they are sending the right message that encourages reporting that provides a venue for members at all levels to raise issues and recommendations to the leadership in a way that is free of reprisal. The Team noted that the Leadership's open door policy was not truly open door.

2) Improve its mentoring program of officers across the state. Command update briefs provide a venue for the leadership to share their vision and for commanders to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. Therefore the Team recommends that the AKNG hold quarterly leader meetings. These meetings would be centered on areas of emphasis such as, commanders, personnel, EO, Legal, and Facilities Management, and these meetings would be joint between with both Army and Air National Guard participation. The meetings need not be in person; VTC and telephone bridges could be used so long as all members are provided the opportunity to openly discuss issues and educate each other regarding issues and challenges.

3) Reinforce, train, and educate on reprisal and retaliation policy. The Department of the Army recently issued guidance to the Army which prohibits retaliation for reporting a criminal offense and directs that investigations following the allegation occur either by the IG or within the command.[41] Such guidance should be reviewed and implemented by the AKNG.

4) Develop a level of transparency to reinforce the concept that justice is being pursued, specifically regarding actions that involve promotion and discipline.

5) Address the validity of claims of ethical and moral misconduct.

6) The AKNG senior leadership and second tier commands need to review the results of the OCI Command Climate Survey, specifically the recommendations for additional changes that can be made within their organizations. A break down for the individual sections surveyed is available upon request.

7) Focus on protecting victims of discrimination and sexual assault from being re-victimized and protect their identity.

[41] See Secretary of the Army Directive 2014-20, Prohibition of Retaliation Against Soldiers for Reporting Criminal Offense. Retaliation is defined as taking or threatening to take adverse or unfavorable personnel action, ostracism, which includes excluding from social acceptance privilege or friendship, and acts of cruelty, oppression and maltreatment.

IX. Additional Recommendations Regarding Military Justice

Recognizing the Team does not include members of the AK Bar, the Team identified eight areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the role of military justice within the state.

1) Review current military legal support to determine whether or not it is optimal to meet the needs of the AKNG.

2) Appoint an AKNG military judge and have one or more trained and certified at all times.

3) Participate in the Army National Guard Trial Defense program in order to meet the demands of defense support.

4) Enhance AKNG participation in the NG Special Victim Counsel Program in order to meet the needs of sexual assault victims through individual legal representation; consider requesting a full time NG SVC located within AK.

5) Coordinate with the State Attorney General on the proper interpretation of Bowen as it relates to the AKNG AGR removal process so as to enable commanders to swiftly remove members involved in misconduct from the full-time force.[42] Until the AKNG develops a process regarding AGR removal, the AKNG might consider holding a pre-termination hearing immediately as a precursor to convening an administrative discharge board.

6) Review and improve training for Commander Directed Investigations. Develop a smart book that will assist in advising investigators how to conduct investigations. Multiple Army Regulation 15-6 investigations at Ft. Greely did not uncover all the issues that started to surface at that installation; as a result, leadership was not able to obtain a full picture of the problems in time to interdict, train, and educate.

[42] It should be noted that removal from the AGR program is a force management tool but that removal itself does not provide "bad paper" and that the leadership must still follow the removal with appropriate adverse administrative action when warranted.

7) Create an action tracking system to improve oversight of all adverse administrative actions. This system (whether paper or electronic, centralized or decentralized) should include: the date of misconduct; the date it became known to leadership; the date an inquiry or investigation began, was completed and received a legal review (if an inquiry/investigation was necessary); the date the adverse administrative action was initiated; the date the documents and notice of adverse action are provided to the service member; the date an action arrives at the Joint Forces Headquarters (JFHQ) for processing; the date the action receives a legal review by the JFHQ SJA; and the date the action arrives at the Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army or TAG's desk for action, execution or appellate consideration.

8) Conduct a thorough review of AKNG personnel files to reinstate documents that were erroneously removed from official military personnel files and to remove locally filed letters which have exceeded their expiration date.

9) Review the existing Alaska state code to determine if it is optimally crafted to serve state needs regarding the AKNG.

X. Additional Allegations

Throughout the assessment, the Team received information regarding allegations of past misconduct that witnesses felt were unaddressed or improperly addressed by the leadership. In each case where specific information was provided, the Team sought any and all information related to the allegation and conducted personal interviews to ensure thoroughness in our review. When appropriate, these matters were brought to the direct attention of AKNG leadership for action. The Team noted that this misconduct was similar to the misconduct identified in the prior allegations, including allegations of fraud, adultery, sexual assault and reprisal occurring within other sections of the AKNG. While evidence pertaining to these additional allegations was not material to the Team's assessment, it provided context for the Team as we evaluated the veracity of the information that was collected as part of the main assessment. The recommendations enumerated above would also serve to address these new allegations as well as future misconduct. Finally, senior leader allegations of misconduct were referred to the applicable service IG.

XI. Investigator's Comments

The AKNG has been the subject of multiple inquiries and assessments, and as a result, the organization may be "over sensed." Commanders and junior members interviewed scoffed at the surveys, stating that initially they thought leadership wanted to know what the issues were, but after the members reported discontent on numerous assessments without any apparent change in the system, they gave up.

Guard members largely viewed the surveys and IG sensing sessions as ineffective and unproductive. However, the AKNG leadership believes these tools are providing them vital information needed to address AKNG needs. This has led to a misperception, whereby they AKNG leadership believe they are addressing soldier and airmen needs, but soldiers and airmen believe their leadership just does not care. This attitude is reflected in the relatively low number of respondents who elected to provide feedback in the Team's Climate Survey (i.e., AKARNG 28.2% response and AKANG 23.02% response).

I. Executive Summary

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard [(AKNG)]." The request highlighted concerns over reports of sexual assault and allegations of a hostile work environment within the AKNG. The Governor's request also sought an overall assessment of the AKNG's command structure and its responses in cases of sexual assault that were otherwise referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition.

Synopsis

The National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations conducted a statewide assessment into the Alaska National Guard and made findings and recommendations in the areas of sexual assault, EEO/EO matters, coordination with local law enforcement, Alaska National Guard member misconduct, command climate and the administration of justice.

A. Findings

- The AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well-organized, but victims do not trust the system due to an overall lack of confidence in the command;

- The AKNG leadership has failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program;

- The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate coordination with local law enforcement regarding cases of misconduct committed by members of the AKNG;

- There were several instances of fraud committed by AKNG members and leadership at the facilities level, but that this fraudulent activity did not have an impact on the reporting of sexual assault. Examples of fraud included embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and misuse of government equipment for personal gain. On 27 August 2014, Governor Parnell requested that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- Actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding trust and confidence in AKNG leadership; and

- The AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct.

B. Recommendations

- The NGB-JA/OCI Team provided seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the state;

- The Team provided five separate recommendations to improve the State Equal Employment Opportunity program;

- The Team recommends that allegations of misconduct under investigation by law enforcement be tracked by the AKNG Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer;

- The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a separate assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- The Team recommends that all levels of command in the AKNG reevaluate their approach to leading soldiers in a positive manner and provided seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's visit and through the climate survey; and

- The Team identified nine areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the administration of justice within the state.

II. Background

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard." In accordance with CNGBM 0400.01, the Chief Counsel for the National Guard Bureau (NGB) appointed an NGB-JA/OCI Assessment Team, hereinafter referred to as "the Team." The assessment was conducted from 19 March 2014 until 13 June 2014.

On or about 19 March 2014, members of the Team travelled to Anchorage, Alaska to meet with Governor Parnell and obtain his specific guidance on the scope of the assessment. Governor Parnell requested an independent look at the AKNG's training, reporting, investigating, and case disposition practices in the areas of sexual assault, hostile work environment (e.g., sexual harassment), and fraud. Additionally, the Governor requested that the Team review matters that were referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition but never prosecuted and assess the current culture, policies, and personnel practices of the AKNG (Army and Air) to determine their effect on the current command climate.

The Team developed an action plan which included: conducting a statewide command climate survey; collecting identified data requirements; conducting on-site interviews at all major AKNG locations; interviewing all AKNG senior leaders, to include the Adjutant General (TAG), the Assistant Adjutant General for both the Air and Army National Guard, and the Director of the Joint Staff; and coordinating with Army Criminal Investigation Division (CID) and local Alaskan law enforcement officials.

From 1 April through 1 June 2014, a command climate survey was conducted using a DoD-approved survey tool through the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute. The Team conducted most of the interviews and reviewed data provided during the timeframe of 28 April through 12 June 2014.

The Team collected volumes of data and travelled over 1,000 miles, visiting Ft. Greely, Eielson Air Force Base (AFB), Clear Air Force Station (AFS), and Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson (JBER). The Team also conducted over 185 personal interviews. Those interviewed included current, former, and retired

members of the Alaska Army and Air National Guard; members of the active duty U.S. Air Force; part-time and full-time civilian AKNG employees; civilian state military forces leaders; local, state and federal civilian law enforcement officials; and U.S. Army Alaska (USARAK) Criminal Investigation Division (CID) officials.

The Team reviewed all allegations and issues identified in the initial request for assistance, as well as subsequent allegations identified through various means including e-mail communications, federal and state congressional submissions, anonymous correspondence, recent media reports, and on-site interviews.[1]

The Team's directive and goal was not to re-investigate previous allegations of sexual assault, hostile work environment, fraud or other misconduct, but rather to assess the instances of misconduct as a whole, identifying common themes among behavior that was already known to have occurred, further evaluating how those incidents were handled by the command. The Team did this by reviewing each allegation of misconduct and the corresponding investigation through analysis of data provided by the AKNG in response to the Team's data request (Tab C) and thru personal interviews conducted by the Team. In this way, each of the Governor's requests is individually addressed within this report.

[1] The Team reviewed all documentation regarding the foregoing matters, to include assessing the administrative actions taken and the current status of the individuals involved. In some cases, the Team re-interviewed witnesses to collect additional evidence or to clarify prior statements. During the course of these interviews, additional and insightful information regarding the organization, its operating standards, and unique challenges became apparent. In order to limit the scope of the assessment to the directed matters, however, the team explored only those additional allegations that either clarified the initial action of the command or provided factual information not previously identified during the initial inquiry.

III. Action Plan

The Team developed the following action plan to address each of the Governor's area of concern: Sexual Assault; Hostile Work Environment; Fraud, Coordination with Law Enforcement; Misconduct; and Command Climate. Each is addressed more fully below.

A. Sexual Assault

In response to the allegations of sexual assault, the Team focused on four areas: review of reported allegations of sexual assault and the actions taken regarding those reports; interviews with victims of the reported sexual assaults, which included both unrestricted and restricted reports[2]; review of AKNG sexual assault policies, practices, training and command emphasis; and review of the results of the NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding sexual assault).

The AKNG provided a matrix of all reported incidents of sexual assault since the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program was initiated in 2006. There were 37 reports of sexual assault; of those, 17 were unrestricted and eight identified sexual assault perpetrators. Some of the allegations reported were investigated by the AKNG; however, most of the allegations involved civilian perpetrators and were referred to AK local law enforcement officials for investigation.

B. Hostile Work Environment

A hostile work environment occurs when there is discriminatory or harassing behavior that is so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[3] Consistent with the Governor's request, the Team focused on three areas: review of all allegations of hostile work environment, including a review of all Equal Employment Opportunity/Equal Opportunity (EEO/EO) complaints and the action taken; interviews with formal complainants and prospective complainants; and the results of the OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding EEO/EO matters).

The Team requested a roster of all EEO/EO complaints going back 10 years; however, there was no clear record-keeping system available that would provide that information.[4] The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM) provided details regarding three active complaints currently being addressed within AKNG units. Additional concerns and complaints were discovered by the Team during the course of the assessment phase and referred to the SEEM or discussed with responsible commanders, as appropriate with the concurrence of the disclosing interviewees. Finally, information regarding the EEO/EO program was provided in the OCI climate survey.

C. Fraud

In response to allegations of fraudulent activities in the AKNG, the Team focused on three areas: review of reported incidents of fraudulent activities and the action taken regarding such reports; interviews with commanders, investigating officers, internal review officials, and the office of the USPFO; and review of internal audits conducted by the AKNG.

The Team reviewed several minor reported incidents of inappropriate use of the Government Purchase Card, each of which was administratively handled through a letter of reprimand/admonishment. There were two high-profile fraud incidents: one incident involved a senior AKNG officer who misused government equipment for personal use, and the another incident involved a senior AKNG enlisted member who re-directed donated funds for personal gain. While each incident was investigated by agencies outside the AKNG, the Team interviewed several personnel involved in those investigations as well as members within the AKNG during the time period when the fraudulent activity occurred. During the course of these interviews, several questions regarding the lawful use of federal funds by state and federal program managers were raised so the Team expanded the scope of fraud to include a review of the AKNG facilities program.

[4] When interviewed, the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the individual responsible for State EEO/EO management and oversight, did not have a database which tracked complaints.

Document ID: 0.7.798.39058.1 Page 8 of 57 SOA-002544

D. Coordination with Law Enforcement

In response to questions regarding the coordination between the AKNG and local law enforcement, the Team focused on three areas: a review of all written agreements between the AKNG and AK law enforcement organizations from 2004-2014; a review of the list of all reported misconduct made by or to law enforcement or any Military Criminal Investigative Organizations (MCIO) involving AKNG full-time and part-time military personnel over the past 10 years; and interviews with AKNG leaders and local law enforcement personnel.

In most cases, AKNG records only went back to approximately 2009-2010, and there was no standardization across lower-level commands within the AKNG with regard to misconduct reporting and tracking. The AKNG provided information regarding 64 cases of misconduct that was reported to local law enforcement over the last 10 years; of those, 56 resulted in disciplinary action. Interviews with local law enforcement officials provided the most detailed information regarding joint efforts in coordination.

To assess the AKNG leadership's handling of the reports of misconduct, the Team reviewed a list of all incidents of misconduct that were tracked at the unit level as well as paper and digital copies of all AKNG command policies and procedures from 2004 to 2014 pertaining but not limited to sexual assault and harassment, fraternization, DUI, improper use of government equipment, recruiting and retention, and ethical standards of conduct.

The AKNG provided 494 reports of misconduct over the past 10 years.[5] The Team reviewed the files and administrative actions taken in response to the reported misconduct, and it conducted interviews with individuals involved in several of the incidents where administrative action followed.

[5] This number includes the 46 cases that were reported to local law enforcement referenced above and 24 EO cases. Of the total number, 115 cases were designated as general misconduct, 3 were cases of fraud, 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, and 62 were alcohol-related incidents.

F. Command Climate

The Team coordinated with the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute (DEOMI) to initiate an NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey targeted at soliciting feedback from all members of the AKNG, to include part-time, full-time support, and federalized members. The survey directly solicited feedback from within the AKNG regarding their leaders' ability to lead, confidence in their leadership, favoritism and respect. Additionally, the team requested copies of any command climate surveys conducted by the AKNG over the preceding five years, as well as all NGB Safety Assessments and NGB Staff Assistance Visit (SAV) reports.

During the period of 1 April to 1 June 2014, approximately 25% of the AKNG participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The results of the survey, detailed in Appendix A, confirmed the issues identified by the Team during their onsite interviews and reiterated issues that had been raised in the 22 previous surveys conducted by the AKNG.

IV. Analysis

Pursuant to its appointment memorandum, the Team focused their efforts primarily on allegations identified in the Action Plan. The Team interviewed over 185 witnesses and reviewed volumes of documents in order to establish an understanding of how each of these areas were managed and addressed within the AKNG, and to note deficiencies, identify any common themes; and, where appropriate, make specific remedial recommendations. The Team's findings and recommendations are detailed in Sections VI through IX below.

The Team identified persistent negative themes in the areas of administration and management of legal support and a general lack of confidence and trust in the AKNG leadership at various levels.

The Team concluded that the lack of confidence relating to both the legal support provided to the command and the lack of trust in the AKNG leadership is impeding the organization from reaching its full potential, and this persistent negative theme is contributing to the perception that the AKNG leadership is not addressing the concerns of sexual assault victims.

A. Analysis of Sexual Assault

The Team conducted extensive interviews with victims who had reported sexual assaults, victim advocates, other current and former service members who supported those victims, and the commanders who implement the DoD Sexual Assault and Prevention Response program within their organizations. The Team reviewed the results of its command climate survey, wherein all participants were asked specific questions regarding sexual assault and sexual assault reporting, and the Team concluded there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011. These issues included poor execution, oversight, and management, as well as suspected confidentiality breaches.

The Team concluded that there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011.

1. Sexual Assault Program Management

Prior to 2012, the AKNG Joint Force Headquarters Sexual Assault Response Coordinator was a contract employee. This was consistent across the lower 48 states as the National Guard Joint Forces Headquarters (NG JFHQ) manning requirements did not initially include a requirement for a Title 32, Non-Dual Status Technician to serve as the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Like programs in other states, however, the AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program was, in fact, overseen by a military member assigned to Family Programs within the AKNG personnel section (J1).

The contract employee serving as the AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator had been appropriately certified through the National Guard Bureau's training in the management of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. According to witnesses and records that were reviewed, she operated independently within the AKNG J1 with little actual supervision and without adequate oversight. The Team learned that records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. As a result, victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner as required by DoD Policy.[6]

Prior to 2012 records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. Victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner.

The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contract was managed by the AKNG J1 Director of Family Programs, who, at that time, was not trained in the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. During the Team's interview with the Director, she acknowledged being unaware of the contractor's deficiencies and confirmed that she relied on the expertise of the contractor to inform her of the program's requirements and any deficiencies. As a result, the magnitude of the record-keeping problem in the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program did not surface until the contractor left the position.

A Title 32, non-dual-status technician position was created in 2011. This resulted in the hiring of a trained and qualified Sexual Assault Response Coordinator who was capable of reshaping the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program over the past three years. The Team found the current program to be effective, and the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator to be well-organized, responsive to victims, well-respected, and actively engaged with the AKNG leadership. Her monthly Sexual Assault Review Board meeting is regularly attended by all senior leaders (to include the TAG and the Assistant Adjutants General Air and Army); thereby ensuring these senior leaders are aware of the current program needs and the status of victim's cases. Interviews with victims that have been in contact with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator confirmed they were generally satisfied with the support she has provided.

Prior program deficiencies have had a lingering effect, however. The Team noted that, when discussing the program with other first responders (Judge Advocates and Chaplains), they stated they would not recommend that sexual assault victims report their assault to the AKNG's Victim Advocates, citing prior program deficiencies as the primary reason.

The Team identified additional concerns from an organizational standpoint. Several witnesses stated that, in the case of the Air National Guard, the Victim Advocate position is an additional duty for the executive officer, who sits within the very command headquarters suite that many reporting victims want to avoid. The location of this position is creating the unfounded perception among airmen that the executive officers are unable to provide confidential assistance, despite the officers' availability by phone or email to arrange a meeting elsewhere. This issue was unique to the Air National Guard as the Army National Guard Victim Advocates are more distributed throughout the force and within the ranks.

The OCI command climate survey substantiated that AKNG service members believed they were working in an environment that was safe from sexual assault and that they would receive support from the chain of command and the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, a significant number of respondents perceived substantial barriers to reporting sexual assault, reflecting a possible continuing lack of trust within the command. Interviews with service members revealed that the positive changes in the management of the program since 2011 are not widely known, at least not as well-known as the challenges that existed in the program prior to 2011.

2. Victim Confidentiality

Most of the individuals interviewed stated that they knew who their Victim Advocate was and understood the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; nonetheless, most individuals also indicated that they would not report a sexual assault due to concerns over confidentiality. The Team noted that prior to 2012 there had been instances wherein commanders either obtained the names of victims who made restricted reports of sexual assault or distilled that same information from the "sanitized" reports that were made in contradiction to DoD policy.[7] Additionally, victims reported that in some cases they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making their restricted reports. Such conduct is in violation of DoD policy.

Some victims reported that they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making restricted sexual assault reports.

Several individuals interviewed expressed concern with reporting a sexual assault, questioning the value of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Several senior AKNG service members interviewed expressed the sentiment that they could not afford to be seen as "a victim" or "weak" in their senior leaders' eyes and therefore would not report. Such sentiment creates the perception that the program is unnecessary, sending the wrong message to commanders, which in turn impacts reporting and assistance for victims.

Confidentiality continues to remain a challenge for the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program.

During the on-site assessment, a victim of sexual assault reported to the Team that she had overheard a fellow service member discussing the details of her own assault while at work. Though she was not individually identified and the individual who was reportedly discussing the information likely did not know her identity as the victim, she was understandably disturbed by the casual manner in which her supposedly confidential information was being maintained and openly discussed.

3. Sexual Assault Case Disposition

The team reviewed 37 cases of sexual assault: 15 were either filed as restricted reports or were not investigated at the request of the victim; 20 were investigated by local law enforcement; and 2 were investigated by MCIOs[8]. Of the 20 investigated by local law enforcement, 4 were still open at the time of the Team's assessment and 16 were closed without further investigations. Many of the 16 closed cases involved the use of alcohol, delayed reporting, or had other evidentiary challenges. As a result, these cases were not prosecuted by local authorities.

Notwithstanding the challenges of criminal prosecution, military commanders have administrative tools available to maintain good order and discipline within military units. Therefore, it is appropriate for commanders to consider administrative action following or pending a decision by local authorities to prosecute a sexual assault case. The Team reviewed only one case where the AKNG leadership decided to pursue administrative action against a perpetrator notwithstanding local law enforcement's decision not to prosecute.

The AKNG leadership from 2009-2013 initiated numerous internal administrative investigations into reported sexual assaults. The Team noted, however, that many of these investigations were led by individuals who lacked the specialized training to conduct sexual assault investigations. As a result, the AKNG administrative investigations were not adequately conducted in some cases.[9]

The AKNG's recent efforts to properly investigate and hold offenders accountable for sexual assaults through coordination with law enforcement and OCI complies with DoD guidance on Sexual Assault Prevention and Response.

[8] MCIOs initially investigated 5 allegations however 3 were referred to local law enforcement once due to jurisdictional issues. Of the 2 cases remaining 1 case went to Court Martial and resulted in acquittal, the other was closed due to insufficiency of evidence.
[9] To address the specific concern that state National Guards lacked sufficient investigative resources, the NGB established the NGB Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in 2012.

Several investigations conducted in the AKNG since 2013 were conducted either by OCI [10] or by an officer certified to investigate on OCI's behalf while serving in a state status. Several of these cases were proceeding toward administrative action at the time of the Team's assessment.

Sexual assault investigations within the National Guard require specialized training due to the complex jurisdictional issues presented. Likewise, state codes typically vary from the DoD definition of sexual assault. Accordingly, not all allegations meeting the military's definition of sexual assault will be investigated by local law enforcement or prosecuted under state law.[11] A detailed discussion of these jurisdictional issues is provided at Appendix C.

B. Analysis of EEO/EO Matters

The Governor requested that the assessment address behavior that may have created "a hostile environment and culture within portions of the AKNG." To assess whether a work environment is "hostile," the Team had to evaluate whether discriminatory and harassing behavior existed and, if founded, whether such behavior was so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[12]

To determine whether a hostile work environment existed, the Team reviewed formal and informal EEO/EO complaints. The data request revealed an incomplete record of complaints regarding hostile work environment, discrimination and sexual harassment.[13] Accordingly, most of the information

[10] Pursuant to CNGBN 0400.01, command investigative options are limited to military criminal investigative organizations, local law enforcement, or the NGB Office of Complex Investigations.

[12] NG PAM 600-22, paragraph 5-6d, provides that when conducting an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment, investigators must document whether or not the harassment was quid pro quo (submission to such conduct is made explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment) or a hostile environment (conduct unreasonably interfering with an individual's job performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, offensive working environment). See also Burlington v. Ellerth, 118 S. Ct. 2257 (1998).

[13] Notwithstanding, the Team did not identify any instances leading to a conclusion of an affirmative withholding of information had occurred, just a general lack of oversight and management.

reviewed by the Team was collected during interviews with the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the unit Equal Opportunity Advisors (EOAs), individual witnesses, and OCI survey responses. The AKNG EEO/EO Office did not maintain a database to track EEO/EO complaints; however, the AKNG SEEM reported there were three known EO complaints. This is inconsistent with the 200 instances identified in the OCI command climate survey, of which 35 were reported to someone within the service member's organization.[14] Additionally, the Team notes that these survey results were only reflective of the 25% of the AKNG who both participated in the survey and responded to questions regarding discrimination and harassment in the workplace, thus indicating that the "real" number was likely higher.

The Team interviewed several individuals who stated that they were subjected to a hostile work environment characterized by inappropriate sexual comments and disparate treatment based on ethnic/national origin. These witnesses stated during interviews that they were treated disparately and had elevated their concerns through their chain of command without successful resolution. A few stated they have lost faith in their leadership's ability to do the right thing. Many referenced the lack of disciplinary action taken by leadership against members who were known to have engaged in fraternization or inappropriate conduct. A further analysis into the specific areas of sexual harassment, disparate treatment, and reprisal/retaliation is included below.

1. Sexual Harassment

Sexual Harassment occurs when there are unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or other inappropriate verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature. [15] The Team learned of several examples of inappropriate

[14] See pages 10-11 of both the AKARNG and AKANG OCI Climate Surveys.

[15] Sexual Harassment is defined by National Guard policy as "a form of gender discrimination that involves unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when: (1) Submission to or rejection of such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of a person's job, pay, or career; or (2) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting that person; or (3) Such conduct interferes with an individual's performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment. Any person in a supervisory or command position who uses or condones implicit or explicit sexual behavior to control, influence, or affect the career, pay, or job of a military member or civilian employee is engaging in sexual harassment. Similarly, any military member or civilian employee who makes deliberate or repeated unwelcome verbal comments, gestures, or physical contact of a conduct of a sexual nature in its interviews with AKNG personnel, including a report of pictures of male genitalia drawn inside aircraft panels at an ANG Wing, flight instructors having sex with flight students, and senior leaders sending harassing and inappropriate text messages. Witnesses reported that AKNG internal inquiries into their complaints failed to substantiate the harassing behavior and as a result no action was taken. Indeed the information provided by the ANG Wings did not reflect that any administrative action occurred as a result of the complaints made.

The Team also learned that there were recent allegations of sexual harassment that had not been referred to EEO/EO; rather, the AKNG leadership was aware of these allegations, which were handled through internal investigation. Leaders should be directly involved in the EEO/EO program and they should collaborate with EEO/EO personnel to provide appropriate lawful recourse for both the complainant and the subject of the complaint. In several instances leaders attempted resolution without the assistance of EEO/EO personnel, this is not optimal. Service members interviewed by the Team perceived leadership efforts at internal resolution as an attempt to cover up sexual harassment allegations. This perception was reiterated in the OCI climate survey, which highlighted fear of reprisal and lack of support from the chain of command as the primary barriers to reporting discrimination.

2. Disparate Treatment

Disparate Treatment refers to intentional treatment of a person that is different than that provided to others based on one or more protected factors.[16] A large number (50+) of Puerto Rican Army National Guard members moved from Puerto Rico to Alaska to supplement the AKNG Military Police unit at Ft. Greely, AK. Several members discussed disparate treatment towards the Spanish-speaking members of this unit. They related that their leadership told Puerto Rican soldiers that they were not allowed to speak Spanish in the "operational" area, which some consider the entire installation. Under Army Policy, commanders may not require the use of English for personal sexual nature is also engaging in sexual harassment." NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

communications that are unrelated to military functions.[17] Command emphasis on the language issue has created a negative environment within the remote location, where members report that some military spouses are even posting derogatory comments about Spanish speaking spouses on social media sites.

There were are also concerns raised about providing medical care for families of service members assigned to Ft. Greely, specifically those with spouses from Puerto Rico. While medical care was a hot topic across the installation, either a lack of information or a lack of command attention created a rift among the former Puerto Rico National Guard members who believed they were receiving diminished medical support for their families because of their national origin. Several individuals interviewed at Ft. Greely stated they were required to provide medical documentation that their families are healthy due to the remoteness of the location, and that these documents were maintained in their personnel files which would impact their tour continuation.[18] They believed this requirement was unique to them based on their national origin, noting that local members of the AKNG were not required to file similar documentation. When the Team inquired with the S1 personnel at Ft Greely about medical documentation, they did not receive a clear response. The S1 himself was confused about the requirement.

Follow-up conversations with the AKNG J1, at JBER, clarified that Army policy requires service members to identify any special needs for family members for which adequate medical care may not be available at certain remote sites. [19] Although this conflicted with the broad requirement implemented at Ft Greely, the Team concluded that the practice was not intended to target certain categories of individuals and may be remedied through additional training.

[17] AR 600-20, paragraph 4-13, provides: "English is the operational language of the Army. Soldiers must maintain sufficient proficiency in English to perform their military duties. Their operational communication must be understood by everyone who has an official need to know their content, and, therefore, must normally be in English. However, commanders may not require Soldiers to use English unless such use is clearly necessary and proper for the performance of military functions."

3. Reprisal/Retaliation

Reprisal occurs when leaders take or threaten to take unfavorable action or withhold favorable action against a military member for making a protected statement, participating in a protected activity, or preparing a protected disclosure.

In order to prevent reprisal/retaliation from occurring, EEO/EO counselors and commanders are required by NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3 to provide the complainant and witnesses with a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan. This plan outlines what constitutes reprisal, covers the Military Whistleblower Protection Act, and outlines the possible consequences for a reprisal action.[20] The plan is to be completed with the assistance of EO professionals and given to the complainant and witnesses involved in EO cases. If used in accordance with regulations, the Reprisal Prevention Plan could eliminate the perception of retaliation and encourage members to come forward with their concerns.

The Team was informed by AKNG EEO/EO personnel that commanders were not completing these plans or advising witnesses of their concern regarding reprisal/retaliation with every new reported complaint. This fact may explain why the OCI survey revealed that one of the top reasons personnel do not report incidents of harassment/discrimination is due to fear of reprisal/retaliation.

[20] Reprisal is defined as by National Guard policy as "taking (or threatening to take) an unfavorable personnel action, or withholding (or threatening to withhold) a favorable personnel action for having engaged in a protected equal opportunity activity…" NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

4. EEO/EO Program Management

The AKNG SEEM is performing two roles within the AKNG Human Resources Office (HRO) – AGR Staffing Specialist and Equal Employment Manager. She shares her office with another officer and has no privacy. She does not directly report to the TAG; rather, she reports issues to the Chief of Human Resources, who accompanies her on all briefings regarding EEO/EO matters provided to the TAG. The AKNG SEEM does not perform site visits on a regular basis to the geographically-separated facilities (i.e., Ft Greely, 168th ARW or Clear AFS). Finally, the Team noted that the AKNG SEEM was behind in completing a mandatory EEO report,[21] which was due in March 2014.

The Team found the failure to track EEO/EO complaints and/or complete the regulatory reporting requirements may be perceived to demonstrate a lack of commitment to the EEO/EO program.

The Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG) Equal Opportunity Program is regulated by NGR 600-21, which requires a Human Resource Equal Opportunity Officer (HR/EO) at the JFHQ level and an Equal Opportunity Advisor (EOA) at every O-6 level of command; these individuals attend mandatory training at DEOMI. The AKARNG has had three different HR/EO's assigned in the past three years; the current individual is deployed for one year and has not been to DEOMI training. Per the aforementioned guidance, the AKARNG should have five trained EOAs; however, they currently have three EOAs, one of whom is leaving the service and one is currently deployed. This creates a problem for individuals who seek assistance with complaints of discrimination and for commanders trying to implement an effective program. Commanders simply cannot meet the mandatory EEO/EO training requirements without trained EOAs.

The Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG) Equal Opportunity Program is directed by ANGI 36-7. The Team interviewed an ANG Wing Military Equal Opportunity Officer (MEO) and EO NCOIC. Three informal reports were pending at the time of the Team's assessment. The Team learned that there were hostile climate issues within the AKANG, but that few people had come forward to file complaints. Interviews with members of both Wings reported a general pattern of inappropriate behavior that was not being addressed by the leadership. Allegations included the public display of nude pictures, sexual innuendo and inappropriate touching occurring within the workplace.

While funding to certify ARNG and ANG EEO/EO representatives through DEOMI or NGB-EO was available, overall support for the program was not evident to the Team at the various echelons of command. Several individuals interviewed expressed concern that the EEO/EO program is getting lost in the mix of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and Inspector General (IG) sensing sessions that were initiated by the AKNG at the request of the TAG to focus on climate issues (EO and SAPR were not participants in the IG sessions). They further believed that personnel are missing the underlying message regarding appropriate conduct in a professional environment.

Additionally witnesses stated that EEO/EO issues brought out during sensing sessions with the TAG and Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army are not forwarded to the AKNG SEEM for resolution; and that the SEEM does not review the command climate surveys being conducted and, as a consequence, cannot provide guidance to AKNG leadership on possible solutions to issues raised within these surveys.

C. Analysis of Fraud

The Team reviewed reported incidents of fraud that had occurred over the past 10 years. Most of the incidents involved the improper use of the government travel or purchase card. One incident involved the embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and another incident involved the misconduct of a senior officer who misused federal equipment and personnel for his own personal gain. In each instance the Team noted that there was a lack of oversight in the AKNG to prevent and detect fraud when it occurred.

The Team learned of recent concerns over program expenditures related to personnel and facilities that became the focus of a July 2013 internal review audit, which was scheduled at the request of the United States Property and Fiscal Officer (USPFO).[22] The audit reviewed the operational controls used to administer the federal operations and maintenance agreement and found that those controls were lacking.[23]

[22] DoD previously determined it was unable to provide federal funding directly to a state's Governor/Adjutant General because, as state officials, they could not be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds. Section 708 of

The audit recommended that the AKNG establish additional compensating controls and realign internal controls to increase federal oversight and control.[24] The audit also found that the Alaska Division of Military & Veterans Affairs (DMVA) altered the federal internal controls making AKNG operations reliant on DMVA's internal control system, which violated federal regulatory requirements.[25]

The internal review found that while the claims for reimbursement under the Cooperative Agreement were valid, the agreement lacked adequate internal controls.

Following the audit Alaska improved their system of accounting for the work performed.[26] However, the oversight of the federal program managers and the base civil engineers continues to be an issue. The Team was provided with a number of examples where program oversight was lacking due to the supervisory relationship

Title 32, United States Code, therefore established the position known as the United State Property & Fiscal Officer (USPFO), which can be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds within the National Guard of a particular state

[23] Under a standard Facilities Operations and Maintenance Activities appendix, the state employees are paid to perform identified jobs and their pay is covered under a cost share relationship between federal and state authorities, and the employees take technical direction from Federal Program Managers for management of priorities, time, and funding accountability. According to the audit, in AK the state employees are managed through a consolidated labor pool. In theory this arrangement could result in cost savings. However, it relies on accurate accounting mechanisms and oversight to ensure that work is being performed and reimbursed which the audit found to be insufficient. The audit noted that the Federal Program Manager was responsible for an activity over which he had limited control noting, "The Federal Program Manager's role has been diminished to an extent that reasonable assurance may not be determined by the Federal Program Manager without additional compensating controls being implemented." AK ANG Audit FY13.

[24] The DMVA (State of Alaska) now submits a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that shows how personnel costs are being charged and access to the real-time payroll database. This allows the Base Civil Engineer (BCE) and Facilities manager the ability to review input to ensure that personnel are not being charged to other accounts for the same time or service.

[26] The State is now required to submit a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that illustrates how personnel costs are being charged; ensuring individuals are not being charged to multiple accounts for the same service.

between state and federal employees and the centralized employment pool. Examples included the scheduling of leave without coordinating with the base civil engineer which interfered with federal project accomplishment through operational delay. Additionally, in one instance a state employee attempted to lease federal property to a state agency without proper federal coordination. The matter was reported to the federal program manager just in time for them to intervene, but the incident exemplified the lack of oversight in this area. Increased oversight and adequate internal controls are essential to the detection and prevention of fraud in the future.

D. Analysis of Coordination with Law Enforcement

The Team noted the AKNG did not track matters referred to local law enforcement for disposition. When information regarding referred matters was requested by the Team, the information had to be pulled together by personnel familiar with the allegations, or via connections to local law enforcement entities. The resulting civilian dispositions of the referred actions were varied. In some cases no formal charges were made and the conduct which gave rise to the investigation went unaddressed. Had these cases been tracked and the information regarding the misconduct been received by the command, the leadership would have been able to monitor the disposition of the alleged misconduct by local law enforcement and may have been able to take more timely appropriate disciplinary action where a nexus between the conduct and military good order and discipline existed.

The Team met with federal and state local law enforcement personnel in Anchorage to discuss misconduct within the AKNG. Additionally, the Team spoke telephonically with state law enforcement investigators throughout the state.

Improved lines of communication with law enforcement will improve good order and discipline within the AKNG

The Anchorage Police noted they do not inquire whether or not the subject of an investigation is a member of the AKNG as a matter of course, and while service members are nominally required to report to their command if they are arrested, there is no mechanism in place that would ensure this actually occurs. As a result, commanders may be unaware of misconduct committed by some service members outside of military installations.

The Team discussed with the AK law enforcement personnel the possibility of annotating when military personnel are investigated. It was determined that an additional data field could be added to the standard AK police report, although such action would be a change in their normal business practice.

The Team met with Army CID to discuss prior AKNG allegations that they had investigated. These included investigations of sexual assault, drug sales and trafficking of federal weapons, all of which were closed due to lack of sufficient evidence. Though significant numbers of AKNG personnel in Anchorage perform duties on a federal installation, there is little coordination or information sharing between the Active Component military and the AKNG.

The Team noted that several of the service members interviewed were under investigation by law enforcement, and at least one was serving probation while serving in an active duty status. This creates a perception that the AKNG leadership is either unaware or unconcerned about misconduct that is occurring in the ranks. Several witnesses perceived that while leadership was aware of misconduct, they have allowed members to serve because the operational mission is more important than the quality of the force or because of the wrongdoer's personal connections to the leadership.

E. Analysis of AKNG Misconduct

To assess misconduct within the AKNG, the Team requested copies of all reported misconduct and subsequent disposition (administrative and criminal) for the AKNG full-time and part-time personnel over the past 10 years. In analyzing the information provided by the AKNG, there were 494 reports of misconduct, of which 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, 62 cases were alcohol-related violations (such as DUI), 37 cases involved sexual assault (17 were unrestricted), 64 cases were reported as civilian criminal misconduct (such as assault), 15 cases were designated as general misconduct, 24 cases were EO-related, 3 cases involved fraud, and 27 other cases involved military misconduct. The Team noted there was a lack of consistency in the tracking of various cases that are reported to the command; there is also a lack of consistent punishment for like offenses.

With regard to matters that primarily involved the AKARNG, most allegations of misconduct were investigated pursuant to Army Regulation 15-6. Allegations involving AKANG members were typically investigated by

Commander-Directed Investigations (CDI) pursuant to the SAF IG CDI Guide.[27] With the exception of the alleged embezzlement of funds from the AKNG family programs fund in 2011, specific allegations of fraud were internally reviewed. While several instances of misconduct were investigated by the applicable MCIO or local law enforcement, there was little evidence that the AKNG maintained situational awareness of these matters. At the time of the Team's assessment, some matters were still being reviewed by local law enforcement and/or the Federal Bureau of Investigation and, therefore, were not the subject of substantive review by the Team.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the AKNG Recruiting and Retention Command. Several command directed investigations initiated in 2012 found that, during the time period of 2008-2009, several non-commissioned officers within this command were engaged in misuse of government vehicles, fraud, adultery, inappropriate relationships and sexual assault. Several of these cases are pending administrative action.

The Team's interviews conducted with the FBI, CID and local law enforcement revealed that the Recruiting and Retention Command had been the target of multiple investigations for crimes such as weapons smuggling, rape, and drug trafficking; however, none of these investigations resulted in prosecution of the crimes under investigation due to jurisdictional issues or lack of evidence.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the Recruiting and Retention Command 2008-2009. Some of this misconduct is now the subject of administrative action.

The Team learned that during the time period investigated, the Recruiting and Retention Command commander reported directly to the AK TAG. This was a deviation from the normal reporting chain of AKNG units in comparison to both his predecessor and successor in command. This arrangement may not be optimal.

Recruiting and retention is strongly emphasized in the AKNG. Successful leaders are measured by their ability to both recruit and retain personnel. In some cases within the AKANG, promotions were tied to recruiting and retention numbers (e.g., unit vacancy promotion could not be utilized unless the Wing was at 95% strength). Additionally, high operational tempo requires the availability of all hands to support ongoing operations in AK. This created a perception that quantity was valued over quality, creating a disincentive to remove problem personnel who were otherwise operationally capable employees. Some Army and Air National Guard witnesses testified that when they approached the leadership regarding misconduct, they were specifically told to stand down.

The Recruiting and Retention commander was reported to be the TAG's friend and neighbor, creating a perception that this commander was invulnerable. This led to questions of the TAG's potential bias and favoritism toward the commander. The Team did not investigate the validity of these allegations.[28]

The Team reviewed a prior investigation into allegations of inappropriate contact between a recruiting member and a student at local high school involved with the JROTC program. The Team conducted several interviews with high school administrators to evaluate these programs but found no known current deficiencies within the program. The school's administration appeared to be generally satisfied with the JROTC and recruiting programs and was unaware of any misconduct.

F. Command Climate Survey

The Team conducted a Command Climate Survey using DEOCS, a Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute based survey tool, from 1 April 2014 until 1 June 2014. The AKNG has a total of 3954 assigned personnel; Army - 1913 and Air - 2041. A total of 1011 personnel or 25.5% of the AKNG completed the OCI Command Climate Survey; Army – 541 at 28.2% and Air – 470 at 23.02%. The Team was told by numerous individuals that they had participated in multiple surveys during the past year and that they were suffering from survey fatigue. The Team learned that there were surveys from commanders, the IG, the NGB Diversity Office, major commands and various other organizations.

[28]According to AR 20-1 paragraph 7-1l, commanders or IGs must forward directly to the Department of the Army Inspector General's Investigations Division, through IG channels, any and all allegations of impropriety or misconduct (including criminal allegations) against senior officials—defined as general officers (including ARNGUS, USAR, and retired general officers), promotable colonels, and SES civilians—within 2 working days of receipt.

1. Climate Survey: Sexual Assault and Safe Environments

While the intent of command climate survey is to provide information to commanders that they can use to improve their command, the Team did not intend to share the results of the survey until after the Team's assessment was complete. However the survey was shared with the AKNG leadership as part of DEOMI's normal protocol. Individuals that participated should report any concerns of retaliation as a result of their candid participation in the survey to NGB-JA/OCI.

The OCI climate survey included several questions regarding Sexual Assault, perceptions of safety, and the overall Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Within the AKANG, a significant number of respondents perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, citing social retaliation, lack of confidence in the leadership and military justice, and lack of privacy which reflects a lack of trust within the command (See Table 1-1). Members of the AKARNG also perceived barriers to reporting sexual assaults, citing lack of confidence in their command and lack of confidence in the military justice system (See Tables 1 and 2).

When asked who can or cannot receive a restricted report of sexual assault, more than 25% of respondents answered that Criminal Investigators or Military Police were able to accept a Restricted Report, which is incorrect. This information indicates that, while the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program is being briefed to soldiers and airmen, there is still confusion when it comes too restricted vs. unrestricted reporting options.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

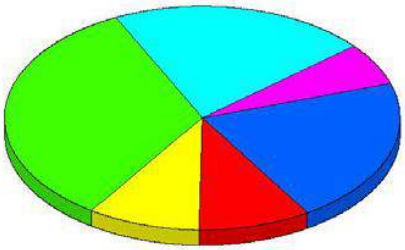
2. Climate Survey: Perceptions of Discrimination

The climate survey reflects 200 incidents of perceived discrimination or sexual harassment during the past twelve months.[29] Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy. Retaliation, gender-based (sexual) harassment and discrimination based on national origin were ranked high among the soldiers and airmen who responded. Of the AKARNG respondents faced with the question, "Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization," 37 said they had been retaliated against, 29 indicated that they had been harassed based on gender and 28 claimed discrimination based on race/national origin.

Respondents to the OCI Survey revealed 200 incidents of perceived discrimination and sexual harassment during the past twelve months. Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy.



Although the AKANG numbers were significantly lower overall, the same areas of concern were highlighted; 11 respondents stated they were harassed based on gender (sex), nine perceived retaliation, six respondents reported discrimination based on religion and five respondents reported discrimination based on race/national origin. A total of 26 men and 14 women responded that they were harassed based on gender. When queried "Did you report any of the incidents of discrimination to someone in your organization," 57 of those that responded did not report the incident to anyone; 35 members stated the barriers to their reporting included "Fear of reprisal," followed by 27 stating "Lack of support from command."

3. Trusting the Leadership

The survey included several areas designed to evaluate: Organizational Effectiveness, Trust in Leadership, and Unit Cohesion. Ten locally-developed questions were asked to evaluate the different echelons of AKNG command. The survey results indicate a lack of trust within the leadership of the AKNG. The organizational effectiveness factors chart reflects male officers and senior enlisted members of the Air Wings and Units fall behind the national average for trusting leadership to manage their organization. The same chart reflects a lack of trust of leadership at all levels of the AKNG.

Overall, the survey reveals a perception of lack of leadership integrity within all levels of command, to include handling of disciplinary actions, favoritism, and communication as well as issues regarding the results from various selection boards.

There is a perception that individuals who file complaints will be exposed to retaliation; 23% of individuals who participated in the survey stated they had been exposed to this behavior. When asked "What are the Barriers to Reporting Discrimination," 35% of respondents stated they would not report based on fear of reprisal. The Team interprets this to mean that soldiers and airmen are truly concerned by what they have witnessed in the organization.

35% of Survey respondents stated they would not report discrimination based on fear of reprisal.

The responses to the OCI Command Climate Survey were consistent with the comments made in the 22 other surveys provided to the Team for review. While these surveys were being conducted at the unit level, this indicates that the issues addressed above should not be new to the leadership. When properly utilized, climate surveys assist the commanders in identifying and reinforcing practices where they have succeeded in meeting or exceeding the national average. Issues where the unit falls below the national average, however, should be treated as an organizational concern that should be identified and addressed.

V. Additional Matters

Though not specifically identified in the Governor's request for an assessment, the Team identified the following additional matters in the AKNG that have contributed to the issues that gave rise to this inquiry.

A. Administration and Management of Justice

Most of the AKNG officers and senior enlisted members cited the inaccessibility of adequate military justice advice as a major barrier to effectively addressing misconduct, with the focus resting squarely on the Joint Force Headquarter Staff Judge Advocate (JFHQ SJA) who serves as the senior National Guard attorney and TAG's personal legal advisor for AKNG matters. Witnesses found her confusing and frustrating to deal with. They reported that questions provided to her were either left unanswered or the answers were so convoluted that they were of little value. While no one questioned her intelligence, personal commitment to the AKNG, or dedication to an ethical climate, they often questioned her legal advice; as a result, they reported to the Team that they and others avoided the JFHQ SJA altogether.

The JFHQ SJA had no apparent case tracking system. There was a handwritten log designed to track requests for legal review, but the legal staff did not routinely monitor its use. The log evidenced receipt, but no disposition, of just one administrative discharge action within the preceding four years. Additionally, the JFHQ had no visibility on the Army or Air National Guard legal matters, despite the fact that several of these matters would ultimately involve TAG action. Several witnesses described requests for legal review that often went unanswered. Additionally, the JFHQ SJA does not provide supervision or oversight over Army or Air matters.

The Team learned that the JFHQ SJA recently had coordinated with the State of Washington's SJA office to provide legal review of a number of AKNG Army investigations. Although impartiality was cited as the reason for the request, this further distanced the JFHQ SJA from the performance of actual legal support to AKNG units.

The AKNG operates over a very large geographic area and the limited number of JAs, both Army and Air, is not optimal. Increasing the number of JAs should lead to enhanced good order and discipline.

Notwithstanding the issues within the JFHQ SJA legal office, the quality of the Judge Advocate (JA) team is very high; recently, the AKARNG hired a full time, dual status military technician to provide daily legal support. This junior officer is currently managing several high visibility disciplinary boards and is very capable, yet significantly overworked. His military supervisor, the ARNG State SJA (a part-time guardsman), was taking appropriate steps to provide technical oversight; however, he is unable to provide hands-on assistance. In addition, the AKARNG does not participate in the Army National Guard's Trial Defense Counsel Program, and as a result relies on JAs from the lower 48 states to provide defense counsel when administrative action occurs.

The Team noted that, although there was an increase in misconduct that occurred at Ft Greely, there was no local part-time SJA assigned to assist the leadership at that location. While one JA was physically present on Ft Greely in his civilian capacity during weekdays, he commutes several hours to JBER on weekends to serve as a JA. Accordingly, legal support to Ft Greely, provided remotely, was less than optimal.

The Air National Guard JAs function as self-contained Wings at JBER (176 WG) and Eielson AFB (168 ARW). The 168 ARW maintains the Air National Guard component's only geographically separated unit (GSU) – the 213 SWS at Clear Air Force Station (AFS). Despite the fact that both Wings maintain robust 24/7/365 Title 10 and Title 32 operational missions, the Wings only have part-time JA positions authorized. There are two JAs at the 168 ARW neither of which currently practices law outside their Air National Guard positions; as such, they are generally accessible between drills. At the 176th WG the SJA is a highly-qualified but with his civilian employment he has little time between drills to tend to the Wing's operational and administrative demands. A new JA fills the deputy SJA position and, upon return from training, his presence should greatly assist in the swift processing of actions. Other then volume of work, there did not appear to be tracking problems or unique challenges for the JAs within the Air National Guard Wings.

The AKNG members serving in a Title 32 or State Active Duty Status are subject to state criminal law. For an analysis of Justice in the Military see Appendix C. Alaska's Code of Military Justice (ACMJ) expressly withholds jurisdiction for any crime that can be tried by civil authorities.[30] Therefore, "common law" crimes such as rape, indecent exposure/touching, and all other assaults cannot be criminally prosecuted under the ACMJ – but must instead be referred to civilian authorities. This leaves only inherently military offenses – such as insubordination, malingering, asleep at post, drunk on duty to be tried by military courts martial under the ACMJ. As a result, AKNG commanders instead rely upon administrative action to address misconduct.

Commanders currently have the ability to administratively separate, demote, and issue reprimands to enlisted members.[31] There are few administrative measures available to address officers involved in misconduct. The most common tool used in AK was the letter of reprimand with an occasional withdrawal of federal recognition as the only real and immediate consequence for officer misconduct.[32] The Team noted a general lack of understanding regarding the permanency of officially filed letters of reprimand; as a result, several letters that had been permanently filed were erroneously removed from officer's personnel files in contradiction to Army and National Guard policy.[33] Meanwhile other locally filed letters of reprimand with an annotated expiration date of 2-3 years should have been removed, but they were still in the service members' personnel files at the time of the assessment.

Administrative Action is the primary tool for commanders to restore order and discipline within their ranks but it must be swift and it must be lawful. As the processing of what appeared to the Team to be routine administrative matters lagged so did the confidence in the State Judge Advocate. The climate survey reflected this concern with 28% of the AKANG and 42% of the AKARNG respondents listing "lack of confidence in the military justice system" as a barrier to reporting sexual assault.

B. Ethical Misconduct

The Team reviewed multiple allegations of ethical misconduct by commissioned and noncommissioned officers in the AKNG. As senior leader ethics continue to be a predominant concern across the Department of

[32] See NGR 635-101, Officer Withdrawal of Federal Recognition.

[33] AR 600-37, paragraphs 7-1 and 7-2, provide that appeals and petitions for removal of unfavorable information be directed to the Department of the Army Suitability and Evaluation Board (DASEB) for action, States cannot unilaterally elect to remove information regardless of what the letter states or the officer giving the letter intended. The subject of the letter has the burden to provide evidence of a clear and convincing nature that the allegations are untrue or unjust, in whole or in part, thereby warranting removal. See also ARNG-HRZ Memorandum for Military personnel Management Officers of All States DTD 29 July 2013 Authority for Removal of IPERMs Documents (PPOM #13-028).

Defense, the Team examined leadership behavior and met with the Department of the Army Inspector General (DAIG) to review prior investigative findings as they related to the AKNG leadership.

The climate survey and interviews conducted by the Team highlighted a lack of trust of the leadership based on perceived instances of favoritism and bias by the senior leadership when responding to substantiated allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraud.

As one example, the DAIG substantiated violations of federal ethical standards by a former AKNG official. The DAIG found that, over a period of several years, the officer had inappropriately used government vehicles, to include helicopters, for personal use. The Team was also informed that this same official had improperly interrogated a victim of sexual assault and exercised bias in the administration of personnel matters. Many individuals interviewed by the Team blamed the current TAG for failing to take administrative action against the former AKNG official after learning of the DAIG findings against the officer.[34]

Substantiated complaints made against one officer resulted in no administrative action; the officer retired at his current rank and, upon retirement, was awarded the Legion of Merit.

The Team reviewed three voluminous investigations conducted at Ft. Greely regarding allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraternization.[35] At JBER the Team received information that multiple individuals within the JFHQ were engaged in inappropriate relationships, were involved in adulterous

[34] Available administrative remedies would have included but not be limited to Withdrawal of Federal Recognition or Grade Determination Board.

[35] Air Force Instruction 36-2909, paragraph 5, provides: "Unprofessional relationships between officers and enlisted members have a high potential for damaging morale and discipline and for compromising the standing of officers. Consequently, officers have an ethical and a legal obligation to avoid certain relationships and activities. Officers must not engage in any activity with an enlisted member that reasonably may prejudice good order and discipline, discredit the armed forces or compromise an officer's standing. The custom against fraternization in the Air Force extends beyond organizational and chain of command lines. In short, it extends to all officer/enlisted relationships." Army policy requires Commanders "seek to prevent inappropriate or unprofessional relationships through proper training and Leadership by example." AR 600-20, paragraph 4-14f.) Accordingly, commanders have the authority and the responsibility to maintain good order, discipline and morale within their units.

Interviews with senior leaders about these allegations revealed they were often aware of the allegations; however, the TAG believed that the AKNG was "not the morality police." Therefore, allegations of inappropriate conduct were not addressed until the conduct rose to the level that necessitated leadership involvement. Some individuals asserted that leadership only took action when individuals involved fell out of favor with the current leadership. The Team noted that, while commanders and other officers or senior enlisted members had been reprimanded for inappropriate relationships or behavior, they were typically allowed to retire at their current grade or simply relocated within the AKNG for continued service. One officer, who had been reprimanded twice for fraternization and adultery, is currently the subject of a reported sexual assault.

VI. Findings

A. Finding 1: Sexual Assault. The current AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well organized but lacks the trust of victims due to their lack of confidence in the command.

1) The Team found there was a clear lapse in appropriate military victim services prior to 2012. There were several instances where victim complaints were not properly documented, victims did not receive accurate information regarding their reporting options, victims were not referred to victim advocates, confidentiality was not provided, and in some cases the victims were ostracized by their leaders, peers and units.

2) The Team found that all of the victims that have reported assault through the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program since 2012 appear to have been properly advised as to the availability of services and have been referred, when permitted, to law enforcement entities for investigation. Additionally, medical and counseling services, both military and civilian, have been made available to all documented National Guard victims of sexual assault since 2006.

3) The Team found continued improvement is needed in the following four areas:

a. Protection of victim's confidential information – Victims had reported instances where their confidential information was discussed publically and instances where information regarding their assault was provided in such a manner that they could be, and in some cases were, easily identified as the victims.

b. Offender Accountability – Victims interviewed stated they lacked confidence that their leadership would pursue disciplinary action in their case and reviews of disciplinary actions supported their conclusion.

c. Leadership understanding of Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative options - Victims that had worked with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator were generally satisfied with the support they were receiving from the program, but many were concerned about reprisal from their command and described instances where their command over reached, re-victimizing them in the process.

d. Knowledge of sexual assault reporting options - Individuals that participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

Finding 2: EEO/EO Programs. The AKNG Leadership failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program

1) The Team found that the lack of senior leadership support weakened the AKNG understanding of the EEO/EO policies and resulted in the inconsistent handling of EEO/EO complaints by leaders across the AKNG, which has contributed to the perception that leaders do not support EEO/EO policies and may engage in reprisal. Command emphasis is critical to provide a forum to address complaints and develop preventative programs to prevent future complaints from occurring.

2) This finding is broken down further as follows:

a. The Senior Leadership is not providing sufficient support for the EEO/EO program. State National Guard EEO/EO programs must include a well trained and accessible State Equal Employment Manager with strong leadership emphasis and support. The Team noted that the EEO/EO program within the organization was not well integrated within their units. Many of the EEO/EO offices were located in areas that were not easily accessible or lacked confidentiality and lacked appropriate contact information when unavailable, thereby inhibiting complaints.[36]

b. The State Equal Employment Manager was not actively managing the EEO/EO program and was not providing oversight as required by NGB policy. The Team noted that the State Equal Employment Manager did not have direct access to the TAG and other levels of command, which resulted in missed opportunities to foster regular discussion of and attention to EEO/EO matters within the workplace.

[36] The Team noted that the 176th MEO Office was hard to find, there were no posters directing personnel, and due to its location inside an old commissary building with the ANG LRS unit it provided little confidentiality for the few that sought EO assistance.

(i) Pursuant to NGR 600-22, the State Equal Employment Manager is the custodian of record for discrimination complaint files and related records. The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager appeared to be unaware of most of the complaints that had been made across the state. The OCI Command Climate Survey revealed that, of the 200 incidents wherein respondents reported they had been the subject of harassment/discrimination in the past year, only 35 actually made a report of harassment or discrimination and the State Equal Employment Manager only had documentation for three of these incidents.

(ii) The Team received multiple reports during their onsite interviews of sexual harassment and discrimination that had not been reported to EEO/EO program managers. In some cases the leadership was familiar with the issues but, as no formal complaints had been filed, they were not seeking resolution or prioritizing efforts to address the overall climate. As a result, the issues persisted without leadership intervention.

(iii) Without active monitoring, emphasis, and oversight the EEO/EO managers were unable to gain leadership support for training and resources and the State Equal Employment Manager was unable to identify any trends or problems that required leadership attention.

c. The AKNG EEO/EO program does not have sufficient number of personnel to meet the requirements for the program as established under current policy.

(i) Pursuant to NGB 600-21, the ARNG must have one Human Resources Employment Officer (HR EO) who runs the ARNG program on the part-time state side and one Equal Opportunity Advisor per 0-6 level of command; all of which must be Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute trained. There was a great deal of turnover in the HR EO position and the current HR EO, who lacks requisite DEOMI training, is currently deployed. In the ARNG there are five 0-6 level commands, however only three EOAs are assigned, one of which is currently pending adverse administrative action.

(ii) Pursuant to Air Force Instruction 36-2706, each Air National Guard Wing is required to have an Equal Opportunity Director (officer) and a NCOIC with support provided to the geographically separated units.

Additionally, Military Employment Opportunity (MEO) program managers should not be assigned additional duties that interfere with their MEO responsibilities. In the AKNG there are two Air National Guard Wings and one geographically isolated unit. The Team found that while they met the staffing requirement, the Wings were not supporting their geographically isolated unit. Additionally, the MEO at one Wing was commuting quarterly from Virginia; and prior to that, from Korea making her inaccessible to service members during standard drill periods, when a complainant would have the opportunity to make their complaint or seek assistance.

d. Finally, AKNG Service members do not trust that their leadership will properly address EEO/EO complaints. OCI command climate survey respondents and witnesses interviewed communicated this to the Team during interviews. Thirty five Survey respondents had not filed a complaint due to "fear of reprisal" and twenty seven respondents stated "lack of support from command" as the primary barriers to reporting. When interviewed, the EEO/EO program managers admitted they did not enforce the requirement that leadership complete the Command Reprisal Prevention Plan as required by NGB policy and did not discuss actions that could be considered reprisal with the unit commander.

C. Finding 3: Coordination with Law Enforcement. The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate the coordination of AKNG service member misconduct with local law enforcement.

1) Without an established coordination relationship, commanders do not have information regarding new and ongoing cases of criminal misconduct. In some cases this lack of knowledge allowed service members to remain on full time operational orders while they were under criminal investigation by local law enforcement. This reinforced the perception that the AKNG leadership was unconcerned with the misconduct, and as a result fewer reports of misconduct were made.

2) Interviews revealed that commanders either relied on information provided to them by the offender or scanned open source materials such as Alaska Court System CourtView online, a web based record of AK court matters, to gather updated information about their service members. This is not an adequate substitute for coordination with local law enforcement.

D. Finding 4: Fraud. The AKNG had several instances where fraud had occurred as well as a perception of fraud occurring at the facilities level; however, this fraud was not found to have impacted the reporting of sexual assault.

1) The Team notes that fraudulent and unethical behavior leads to a lack of confidence and trust in senior leadership, and this is a key component to victim reporting behavior. There were two specific instances where well-known fraudulent activity had occurred, neither of which were connected to sexual misconduct. The issues were investigated by organizations outside of the AKNG, and some level of administrative action and or criminal prosecution had occurred. In both instances, there was a perception that senior leaders either endorsed or neglected actions that allowed the fraud to occur. The Team notes, however, that the AKNG has demonstrated an improved emphasis to target fraud which was evident in their active internal review program which detects and prevents fraudulent activity.

2) The Team also found there is currently a concern over the management of state employees under the cooperative agreement's Facilities Operations and Maintenance Agreement (FOMA) and a perception that the lack of federal oversight violated federal law and policy. The Team reviewed the internal review that was conducted on the Alaska Air National Guard in 2013 which specifically addressed the above areas as issues that needed to be corrected and called for "attributable" controls to be put in place. Interviews with the USPFO revealed that the recommendations have been largely implemented and that the current accounting system is now auditable. However, the Team lacked the subject matter expertise to ensure that these changes are being implemented.

E. Finding 5: Command Climate. The climate survey highlighted the fact that actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding the trust and confidence in the leadership of the AKNG.

1) The Team found that some of the AKNG senior leadership lacked a true open door policy.[37] An open door policy is meant to encourage subordinate members to raise issues or concerns they have which they believe they cannot address within their current chain of command. The open door policy is generally published and available for members in the unit to view. The Team noted that in some instances the open door policy required the service member to schedule the meeting through their current leadership, or it provided that once scheduled the meeting would include their current leadership. While each commander sets his own open door policies, this practice was counterproductive as members reported they were dissuaded from raising issues they believed they could not resolve within the command. Additionally, as is traditionally the case, the senior leader's policy will inform the junior leader's policy which has had a cascading effect upon the force in Alaska.

2) The Team found that the AKNG does not have a strong mentoring program. Junior commanders stated they did not receive senior level guidance or mentoring and that there was no venue available that would encourage the sharing of ideas and information and to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. This was also true within the different support organizations such as personnel, legal, and EEO/EO.

3) The Team found there was a perception that the members of the Recruiting and Retention Command received preferential treatment. There was a history of reports of criminal misconduct coming from the Recruiting and Retention Command which was not timely investigated creating an impression for several witnesses of favoritism, bias, complacency, or delay of justice. The AKNG leadership had received complaints in 2010 of criminal activity that included inappropriate relationships, fraudulent use of government equipment, adultery and sexual assault. These allegations were not investigated by the AKNG until December 2012. Individuals involved in this misconduct are currently the subject of several disciplinary boards. Though many individuals interviewed were aware of the recent disciplinary boards, witnesses expressed doubt that the TAG will approve results that recommend unfavorable action against members of this command.

4) The Team also found there is a lack of transparency in the personnel management system. Members interviewed were confused about the various promotion requirements and roles of various senior leaders in the process. Additionally, there was no structured mentoring program or regular command/special branch meetings that would provide a venue to discuss misconduct, EO/EEO, promotions, appropriate ethical conduct, etc. In the absence of such a venue, junior leaders and advisors are not receiving the leadership emphasis needed for personnel programs (such as EEO\EO) and are not benefiting from the experience of their leaders which has adversely impacted the perceptions of junior and senior leaders. Many interviewees perceived that favoritism was occurring, when in many cases appropriate and thoughtful personnel decisions were being made.

5) The Team found there was a perception that the AKNG leadership, to include the TAG, were engaged in ethical and moral misconduct and therefore they lacked the moral high ground to take appropriate action when disciplinary matters arose. This perception was articulated during personal interviews and documented in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The Team, however, does not have the authority to investigate misconduct by senior government officials (O-6 promotable and general officers) as such, all allegations were referred to the appropriate service investigative body. While the Team did not investigate these allegations, the Team found the allegations pervasive; as a result, whether the allegations are accurate or not, this perception must be addressed in order to restore faith and confidence in the AKNG leadership.

6) The "Overall Unit Summary" in the OCI Command Climate Survey shows the AKNG falls at or below the National Guard average in most of the categories assessed. Notwithstanding these numbers, the survey does not reflect a broken AKNG, merely one that needs administrative and "corporate culture" improvement while maintaining its current high level of operational capability. Issues remain regarding fear of reprisal, lack of accountability and lack of confidence in the AKNG leadership based on the interviews conducted and documentation collected by the Team.

7) The Team found that AKNG commanders are not providing consistent support to victims of discrimination and sexual assault. Several victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment stated they were ostracized by their unit after reporting their experience. Many of these victims continue to receive counseling because of the reprisal they believe they experienced. The failure to properly train and document reprisal, noted previously in the findings related to EO/EEO, greatly undermined the effective response of commanders.

VII. Additional Findings Regarding the Administration of Justice

The Team finds the AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct. While the administration of justice and personnel management is a command responsibility, several of the delays involved in the processing of administrative actions were directly attributed to AKNG management of legal support.

Due to challenges associated with the prosecution of offenses under the Alaska Code of Military Justice (ACMJ), commanders rely solely on administrative measures or tools to maintain order and discipline within their force. [38] In the AKNG, all of these tools appear to be used more or less appropriately, with two exceptions: removal from the AGR program and administrative discharges. The Team noted long delays and reluctance to use both AGR removal and administrative discharge processes.

The Team assessed each of the following as contributing to these problems: weak discipline imposed upon the force; a forgiving command climate; overly cautious and inexperienced commanders; a lack of experience in processing actions by subordinate commanders; and a lack of available legal counsel to advise commanders and investigating officers (IOs) or to conduct timely legal reviews for approval and imposition. Additionally there was a lack of an adequate action-tracking mechanism.[39]

Justice is both a senior leader and a SJA issue. Many of the delays the Team found seemed to be attributable to the office of the SJA and the chronic lack of staff with the mission of supporting what is in many regards an operational full-time force. Dating back to 2006, the Team found several examples of substandard members who were properly processed for administrative discharge, only to have discharge actions delayed indefinitely,

[38] These tools generally include: informal counseling; a written letter of counseling (LOC) or reprimand (LOR); annotating misconduct on a member's evaluation/performance report; withholding or delaying (or modifying) promotions; change in duty assignments, shift assignments or transfers; administrative demotion; removing active guard/reserve (AGR) members from their full-time orders; and, finally, administrative separation from the National Guard.

[39] The Director of the Joint Staff recently developed a tracking system and was holding monthly boards to gain better oversight increased awareness along these lines will improve her efforts.

unexecuted, re-characterized or re-examined by senior leadership. While senior leaders have the authority to take final action, which includes modifying final dispositions when they deem appropriate, there appeared to be a lack of transparency in these decisions, thereby undermining the integrity of the process.

Much of the delay in administrative discharge processing appears to be intertwined with state-imposed requirements which impede the processing of early termination of AGR orders.[40] When a National Guard member is recommended for removal from the AGR program, the member is entitled to due process. In many of the other states the member is given just a few days to respond – specifically, seven days in the ANG component and fifteen days in the ARNG component. If the member responds to contest the proposed removal, TAG decides whether or not removal/curtailment is appropriate. In the Air components, the member may appeal (again, to TAG), but the separation proceeds.

The AKNG's inability to utilize this force management tool is directly attributed to the Alaska Supreme Court case of State v. Bowen, 953 P.2d 888 (Alaska 1998). As a result of this case, the JFHQ SJA has advised commanders and unit-level judge advocates that whenever a member's misconduct is of sufficient severity that discharge is also warranted, a single, combined "adversarial hearing" should be held. This level of process requires lengthy delays to convene a hearing, during which time the member continues receiving a federal paycheck. As a consequence, these members, accused of misconduct, continue to perform duties, often with little more than "make-work" or "do-nothing" assignments. The Team heard very clearly from a number of interviewees that this perceived inability to remove full-time AGR members is hurting morale within the AKNG, creating a toxic work environment.

The team reviewed this case and recommends that the AK Attorney General's Office render an opinion, in coordination with the NGB Office of the [40] Under both Army National Guard regulation (NGR 600-5) and Air National Guard instruction (ANGI 36-101), probationary AGR members (generally those with fewer than six years' AGR service and less than 18 years total active federal military service, or TAFMS) are more easily removed than career AGR members (six or more years AGR or more than 18 years TAFMS); but career members may nonetheless be involuntary removed for cause whenever the facts and circumstances of their misconduct warrant removal.

Chief Counsel, pertaining to the applicability of State v. Bowen to AGR tour curtailment.

VIII. Recommendations

The Team makes recommendations to address the specific findings that have been addressed. Additionally, the Team makes separate recommendations for the administration of justice in the AKNG.

A. Recommendation 1: Sexual Assault. The Team has seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the AKNG.

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Continue the education of AKNG service members on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program, to include the availability of resources, advocates, counsel and information regarding confidential reporting options,

2) Improve the reporting process to ensure victims' information is kept confidential.

3) Ensure action taken in each of the cases investigated is shared with the victim through the VA program. Specific guidance is outlined and required by DoDI 6495.02.

4) Develop ways to provide transparent and informed justice regarding sexual assault matters, as well as other misconduct, to shift the culture from acceptance to accountability.

5) Reinforce leadership education on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative resources available to the command.

6) Set the tone for sexual assault and harassment awareness by strengthening the policies that are meant to educate soldiers and airmen about respect and responsibility for one another.

7) The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator needs to reinforce training on reporting options with special emphasis on who can take a restricted report. Individuals that participated in the Team survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the SAPR program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

B. Recommendation 2: EO Programs. The Team has five separate recommendations to improve the AKNG Equal Employment Opportunity program

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Reinforce the AKNG EEO/EO program to ensure individuals understand options in regards to privileged communications and protection from retaliation; visibly increasing leadership support is paramount.

2) Ensure their AKNG EEO/EO program includes well-trained and accessible EO Program participants. The SEEM must have direct access to TAG or the other levels of command in order to facilitate a discussion regarding EO within the workplace. Additionally, the EEO/EO program must be incorporated into leadership discussions such as the monthly Sexual Assault Review Board (SARB) in order to facilitate the exchange of information relevant to combating sexual assault and harassment.

3) Ensure the AKNG EEO/EO program meets or exceeds the personnel requirements for the program as established under current policy and that all EEO/EO personnel are trained and certified in accordance with Service guidelines. The Team further recommends that an EOA position be formally established at Ft Greely. Although Ft Greely is not an O-6 level command which would require a separate EOA, due to their remote location and the issues identified by the Team as highlighted in the analysis regarding disparate treatment, continued EO representation at that location is warranted.

4) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to receive additional training on her roles and responsibilities in order to improve current program oversight and case tracking.

5) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to conduct additional training on EEO/EO complaints management for senior leaders that includes training on creating a Command Reprisal Prevention Plan.

C. Recommendation 3. Coordination with Law Enforcement.

The Team recommends that all allegations of misconduct under investigation by local law enforcement be tracked by the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer. Additionally when appropriate, the Staff Judge Advocate should make recommendations for administrative action pending the finding of local law enforcement officials, to include removal from the AGR program.

D. Recommendation 4: Fraud.

The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG. Regarding the theft and misuse of federal resources by service members, the Team recommends that the AKNG continue its efforts to combat fraud through its current Internal Review program.

E. Recommendation 5: Climate. The Team has seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's assessment and through the OCI Command Climate Survey.

The AKNG Leadership needs to:

1) Review their open door policies across the command to ensure they are sending the right message that encourages reporting that provides a venue for members at all levels to raise issues and recommendations to the leadership in a way that is free of reprisal. The Team noted that the Leadership's open door policy was not truly open door.

2) Improve its mentoring program of officers across the state. Command update briefs provide a venue for the leadership to share their vision and for commanders to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. Therefore the Team recommends that the AKNG hold quarterly leader meetings. These meetings would be centered on areas of emphasis such as, commanders, personnel, EO, Legal, and Facilities Management, and these meetings would be joint between with both Army and Air National Guard participation. The meetings need not be in person; VTC and telephone bridges could be used so long as all members are provided the opportunity to openly discuss issues and educate each other regarding issues and challenges.

3) Reinforce, train, and educate on reprisal and retaliation policy. The Department of the Army recently issued guidance to the Army which prohibits retaliation for reporting a criminal offense and directs that investigations following the allegation occur either by the IG or within the command.[41] Such guidance should be reviewed and implemented by the AKNG.

4) Develop a level of transparency to reinforce the concept that justice is being pursued, specifically regarding actions that involve promotion and discipline.

5) Address the validity of claims of ethical and moral misconduct.

6) The AKNG senior leadership and second tier commands need to review the results of the OCI Command Climate Survey, specifically the recommendations for additional changes that can be made within their organizations. A break down for the individual sections surveyed is available upon request.

7) Focus on protecting victims of discrimination and sexual assault from being re-victimized and protect their identity.

[41] See Secretary of the Army Directive 2014-20, Prohibition of Retaliation Against Soldiers for Reporting Criminal Offense. Retaliation is defined as taking or threatening to take adverse or unfavorable personnel action, ostracism, which includes excluding from social acceptance privilege or friendship, and acts of cruelty, oppression and maltreatment.

IX. Additional Recommendations Regarding Military Justice

Recognizing the Team does not include members of the AK Bar, the Team identified eight areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the role of military justice within the state.

1) Review current military legal support to determine whether or not it is optimal to meet the needs of the AKNG.

2) Appoint an AKNG military judge and have one or more trained and certified at all times.

3) Participate in the Army National Guard Trial Defense program in order to meet the demands of defense support.

4) Enhance AKNG participation in the NG Special Victim Counsel Program in order to meet the needs of sexual assault victims through individual legal representation; consider requesting a full time NG SVC located within AK.

5) Coordinate with the State Attorney General on the proper interpretation of Bowen as it relates to the AKNG AGR removal process so as to enable commanders to swiftly remove members involved in misconduct from the full-time force.[42] Until the AKNG develops a process regarding AGR removal, the AKNG might consider holding a pre-termination hearing immediately as a precursor to convening an administrative discharge board.

6) Review and improve training for Commander Directed Investigations. Develop a smart book that will assist in advising investigators how to conduct investigations. Multiple Army Regulation 15-6 investigations at Ft. Greely did not uncover all the issues that started to surface at that installation; as a result, leadership was not able to obtain a full picture of the problems in time to interdict, train, and educate.

[42] It should be noted that removal from the AGR program is a force management tool but that removal itself does not provide "bad paper" and that the leadership must still follow the removal with appropriate adverse administrative action when warranted.

7) Create an action tracking system to improve oversight of all adverse administrative actions. This system (whether paper or electronic, centralized or decentralized) should include: the date of misconduct; the date it became known to leadership; the date an inquiry or investigation began, was completed and received a legal review (if an inquiry/investigation was necessary); the date the adverse administrative action was initiated; the date the documents and notice of adverse action are provided to the service member; the date an action arrives at the Joint Forces Headquarters (JFHQ) for processing; the date the action receives a legal review by the JFHQ SJA; and the date the action arrives at the Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army or TAG's desk for action, execution or appellate consideration.

8) Conduct a thorough review of AKNG personnel files to reinstate documents that were erroneously removed from official military personnel files and to remove locally filed letters which have exceeded their expiration date.

9) Review the existing Alaska state code to determine if it is optimally crafted to serve state needs regarding the AKNG.

X. Additional Allegations

Throughout the assessment, the Team received information regarding allegations of past misconduct that witnesses felt were unaddressed or improperly addressed by the leadership. In each case where specific information was provided, the Team sought any and all information related to the allegation and conducted personal interviews to ensure thoroughness in our review. When appropriate, these matters were brought to the direct attention of AKNG leadership for action. The Team noted that this misconduct was similar to the misconduct identified in the prior allegations, including allegations of fraud, adultery, sexual assault and reprisal occurring within other sections of the AKNG. While evidence pertaining to these additional allegations was not material to the Team's assessment, it provided context for the Team as we evaluated the veracity of the information that was collected as part of the main assessment. The recommendations enumerated above would also serve to address these new allegations as well as future misconduct. Finally, senior leader allegations of misconduct were referred to the applicable service IG.

XI. Investigator's Comments

The AKNG has been the subject of multiple inquiries and assessments, and as a result, the organization may be "over sensed." Commanders and junior members interviewed scoffed at the surveys, stating that initially they thought leadership wanted to know what the issues were, but after the members reported discontent on numerous assessments without any apparent change in the system, they gave up.

Guard members largely viewed the surveys and IG sensing sessions as ineffective and unproductive. However, the AKNG leadership believes these tools are providing them vital information needed to address AKNG needs. This has led to a misperception, whereby they AKNG leadership believe they are addressing soldier and airmen needs, but soldiers and airmen believe their leadership just does not care. This attitude is reflected in the relatively low number of respondents who elected to provide feedback in the Team's Climate Survey (i.e., AKARNG 28.2% response and AKANG 23.02% response).

Dear BOI/PR,

I again apologize that we did not receive your message until last week; I can certainly understand your frustration. Our office was distressed to learn than many constituent messages had not been received, keeping us from providing answers and assistance, as we work to do every day for Alaskans. Unfortunately, the system problem occurring at the time you wrote prevented messages longer than 4,000 characters from being delivered to us. The level of detail you provided in your message put it over that threshold, and regrettably, we did not receive the information in a timely matter. We very much regret this circumstance, and the problem has been fixed so it will not occur again in the future.

Though we are confident that the webform on our site is fixed and fully functional, please know that you can always send a message from your email account directly to governor@alaska.gov if you want to contact the Governor by email in the future. This traditional email account works separately from the webform, and also allows word documents or other files to be attached.

As you may know, Governor Parnell received the National Guard Bureau's report this week and released it to the public yesterday. I have attached a copy of the press release which includes a link to the report. Governor Parnell also asked for and received Major General Katkus' resignation. The Governor is assembling a team to implement the recommendations of the National Guard Bureau, and further evaluation and investigation is ongoing.

I am copying Governor Parnell's Deputy Chief of Staff Cindy Sims in this message. She will be able to speak to you regarding the circumstances you raised and may be able to provide answers to questions that you have. Mrs. Sims will be in touch with you soon at the number you provided, or you can feel free to contact our office at 907-451-2920.

On behalf of our office, we are deeply grateful for your military service to our state and nation in harm's way, protecting our freedoms.

You're kidding me, right? Of the four politicians I wrote, your office is the ONLY one who never responded. Then when you do, I get the Lois Lerner "Oh, our computer screwed up" excuse. No, the issue is not resolved. His separation board was BOI/PR and he is STILL in the guard. I am very interested to see what was in the NGB OCI's report, IF it ever becomes public. I would love to speak about this ongoing issue over the phone, as in email it would be far too long of a conversation. Please have someone from your office, preferably someone who can give me answers, call me at BOI/PR .

I have served my country for the past BOI/PR years, the first BOI/PR as an active duty soldier based at Ft. Wainwright, and the last BOI/PR as an Alaska Army National Guardsman based out of BOI/PR. Over these past BOI/PR years, I have not only been through, but excelled through countless trials and tribulations the vast populous can never begin to imagine. I completed one tour in BOI/... in BOI/PR, where I saw my brethren permanently scarred and disfigured. I completed some of the Army's toughest, most demanding training in some of the harshest climates. I missed my first-born child's first birthday. My knees cause me constant pain from the countless miles of running and ruck marching. My left hip pops every time I move it, causing pain from the IED (improvised explosive device) that bashed my left side against the truck I was riding in. My ears constantly ring, causing seriously degraded hearing from all the rounds, not only that I have fired, but also the ones cracking over my head, because fortunately the insurgent sniper was not as good a shot as he thought.

All that said, if you were to ask me if I would do it over again, my answer, without hesitation would be an emphatic "I absolutely would!" because I have also had countless life-altering positive accomplishments. I will forever have the pride and satisfaction that I voluntarily stood up to serve my country in a time of war on multiple fronts and survived. I have gotten to travel the world, even if most of the places I have been were desolate wastelands. I have made bonds with friends, brothers that no number of miles can break. I have learned skills so few people get the opportunity to see first-hand let alone master. I have seen the stuff movies are made of. I have felt the concussion of explosions, both friendly and enemy, and I will forever know that almost child-like excitement that comes with it.

Unfortunately the past year and a half of my military career has brought a sour note to my service, not because of my own misdeeds, but those of others. About BO... years ago, I decided to change my MOS (military occupational specialty) from BOI/PR to BOI/PR. When I did, my new supervisor became BOI/PR. It became obvious early on that we seemingly had a lot in common. We were both prior infantry, both sniper trained, and both had an "old-military" mentality of accountability and integrity above all else. I flourished in my new role as a BOI/PR, and established myself as the non-commissioned officer best suited to take over the role of BOI/PR when my supervisor went to a d ifferent position in the unit. In BOI/PR, I was in BOI/PR completing the necessary training for my new MOS when rumors started flying that my wife was supposedly having an inappropriate relationship with BOI/PR. My wife caught word of it, and immediately told me about the rumors. I reported it to BOI/PR, and he quickly put the blame for the rumors on the wife of another NCO in my section and dismissed it as purely rumors based on jealousy because I was going to take over as BOI/PR. That NCO and his family had, until then, been very close with my family and I, and after learning of BOI/PR's findings, we regrettably had a falling out, keeping our relationship strictly professional. I returned from BOI/..., got promoted, and became the BOI/PR.

Fast forward to BOI/PR at our annual training in BOI/PR. While my section and I were up at our observation point for three days doing a live fire exercise, I ha d an opportunity to have a serious talk with the NCO mentioned earlier regarding what had happened back in BOI/PR. He told me that there was a lot more that my wife was not telling me, and that it had been bothering him since our falling out. He told me he could no longer keep the information he had to himself. He told me they had screen shots of text message conversations between my wife and his wife, where my wife detailed some of the things BOI/PR had been saying and doing behind my back. He was hesitant to give me specific details, for fear of reviving prior conflicts, but told me that I should have a serious conversation with my wife.

When I got home I finally convinced my wife to come clean and tell me what she had been hiding from me for so long. She told me he had done things ranging from excessive complimenting to inappropriate touching, all the way up to pressuring my wife into telling him she loved him. He would regularly tell her things like "You look smoking hot." and "I only used BOI/PR to get close to you." and "If you stick with me, I will make sure your husband flies through the ranks." She told me he was constantly sending her text messages and would not stop. She told me that he had pressured her into telling him she loved him. She told me the only reason she hadn't told me sooner was because he used his rank and position to intimidate her and held my promotion over her head.

I got on my cell phone provider's website to substantiate what my wife had told me. I found that several months had hundreds, and sometimes thousands of text messages between BOI/PR and my wife. Most specifically, the month of BOI/PR, when I was in BOI/..., he obviously took advantage of my absence, sending and receiving over 5,000 text messages. There were also phone conversations, many of which were longer conversations than my wife and I typically have on the phone. I took all of what I had found to my commander and first sergeant, and they both immediately said it required serious action. They sent it up the chain of command, until it got to the brigade commander, then BOI/PR. He assigned a special investigating officer, BOI/PR, who was to come to BOI/PR to investigate the allegations, not only of BOI/PR's actions towards my wife, but other disturbing offenses committed towards female soldiers and inappropriate activities conducted in the BOI/PR armory after business hours.

BOI/PR came to BOI/PR in midBOI/PR and conducted his investigation, interviewing several critical witnesses. The brigade commander decided it warranted further investigation and he briefed the state commander, Brigadier General Mike Bridges and the state command sergeant major, Command Sergeant Major Pam Harrington. He submitted his recommendation for BOI/PR's removal from the AGR program and a TDY move to Anchorage for separation proceedings. Throughout this process my wife and I were promised by my squadron commander, BOI/PR, the brigade commander, then-BOI/PR, and the state SARC (Sexual Assault Response Coordinator) Octavia Thompson that we would be kept updated on the case and how it was proceeding.

For the next two and a half to three months, we heard nothing other than "JAG is reviewing the case before they proceed". Finally, in late BOI/PR, along with my Command Sergeant Major and First Sergeant, briefed me that BOI/PR would be going TDY to Anchorage very soon for the remainder of the investigation. Nearly a month and a half later, we had heard nothing from anyone regarding the case. I confronted my commander, BOI/PR and my First Sergeant, BOI/PR, regarding the broken promise of being kept in the loop and the lack of communication. They told me that he was being processed for discharge, but that nothing had changed. I expressed to them that if that was in fact the case, then a two minute phone call to the victim should be pretty easy, at least to let her know that it was still on-going and that the unit had not forgotten their promise to her. My commander, BOI/PR called my wife that evening and apologized for the break-down in communication and gave her the same, limited information he had given me earlier that day.

Almost exactly one month later, I was advised that BOI/PR would be in town for the week of BOI/PR in order to sign items over to another leader. That weekend I found out from a subordinate soldier, who was not even part of the investigation, that BOI/PR had expressed to him that he had been going to mental health, and that the doctor "thought there might be something wrong" with him, and that they were allegedly going to prescribe him medication. The following Monday I asked my First Sergeant if he knew about the c onversation. He said he knew nothing about it. I raised the point that it had already come out that BOI/PR had previously threatened the other NCO involved in the investigation for questioning him regarding his conduct with the wives of soldiers, and how that information coupled with the new information of BOI/PR seeing a mental health professional raised serious safety and security concerns with not only myself and my family, but the other NCO involved and his family. My family and I recently moved to BOI/PR, and have opted not to give the unit our new address for safety and security reasons, however BOI/PR knows where the other NCO lives. Coincidentally, the week BOI/PR was in town, someone falsely accused the other NCO involved in the investigation of involvement in a hit-and-run. Fortunately, the other NCO was at work, furthermore, the vehicle he was allegedly driving, as described by the other driver with vehicle description, plate number, and driver de scription (mid-day, while he was at work) had been sitting at his house and had not been moved for a week, as he was on call with his civilian employer, therefore his personal vehicle was covered in snow and had no fresh tracks showing movement.

We are in the seventh month since this investigation began, and we still have gotten very little information, the case is moving at a snail's pace, and quite frankly, my family lives in fear and shame for what has happened and what could potentially happen if BOI/PR were to decide he wanted vengeance for my wife coming forward. We had filed for a restraining order early on, however, despite the mountain of evidence we presented to the magistrate, compared to BOI/PR's blank legal pad and the response of "I cannot refute the allegations, I am simply here to find out the terms of the restraining order." the magistrate somehow determined there was "not enough evidence to warrant a restraining order". My wife used to frequent ly go to the armory, volunteering her time to help coordinate family programs and unit morale events such as last year's unit Christmas party. Now she has sworn off the National Guard, and wants nothing to do with the unit. She no longer even supports me being in the National Guard, but endures my monthly duty because she knows it is a commitment I made.

Speaking of commitments, jumping back to BOI/PR, shortly before going to my training in BOI/..., I extended my contract for an additional BOI/PR in order to be eligible to attend my training. Shortly after arriving in BOI/..., the unit retention NCO contacted me and notified me there was a mistake on my contract, and that we needed to re-do it right away. I gave him the FAX number where he could send the new contract, and told him as soon as he sent it, I would sign it and send it back. The following day, I went to receive the FAX, and found he had never sent it. I contacted the retention NCO, and he said that his higher-ups said it could wait until I returned in early BOI/PR. When I returned, I immediately made contact with him to re-do my contract and he said he would get it taken care of and let me know when it was ready. This went on for several months, until we were just a few months away from my original ETS (Estimated Time of Separation), when I told my chain of command I was worried that it would not get done before my ETS, and that I would have no choice but to ETS because the contract was null and void. I also learned that the retention NCO failed to do the incentive contract he had promised, saying I would be paid a $10,000 incentive for my extension of

BOI/PR.

My ETS was originally in BOI/PR. By BOI/PR the unit finally started digging into what needed to be done, and found that someone had already mistakenly put the contract into the system, and that I was stuck with it, and would not get an incentive bonus. Our personnel NCOIC, BOI/PR went to great lengths researching regulation and policy to find a solution. He was finally able to find a solution that would result in the modification of the contract I signed in the BOI/PR, and I would then be able to sign a new contract, to include an incentive bonus contract. My ETS was adjusted to BOI/PR, and at the end of the last week of BOI/PR they finalized the new contract, this time extending for BOI/PR for an incentive bonus of $5,000. I was informed that the bonus would begin processing the day after my ETS, which was BOI/PR, and that it would take roughly 30 to 45 days to be deposited into my account. Well, we all know what happened with the government shut-down on BOI/PR, and obviously it delayed my incentive.

At the beginning of BOI/PR, when I spoke to my commander and first sergeant regarding the lack of communication about my wife's case, I also asked about my bonus, as it had been a month and I h ad heard no information about the status or timeline of my bonus.
They told me it was at PEC and NGB in Washington D.C. and that it should be deposited within a couple of weeks. A month later, and in true keeping of my unit's style, with no follow-up or communication as promised, I asked again, about my bonus. Three days later, I received a phone call from my commander stating that my bonus was still at PEC and NGB being reviewed. I am obviously getting nowhere with my unit, so I have decided to reach out to you. I truly hope that you can help me sort out what is going on with my bonus, and perhaps gain more ground than my unit is willing to attempt.

As I said earlier, I have served BOI/PR years in the military, and never once have I even gotten so much as a negative counselling statement. I do my best to set the example and uphold the highest standards. In the course of less than a year I have brought my section from a circus in shambles to the shining star of the brigade at our last annual training. My subordinates would do anything for me, because they know I would do anything for them. Perhaps that is just the mindset and mentality instilled in me by my grandfather, the World War 2 veteran. Perhaps I should be a bit more willing to change and adapt to the times, but in my mind, the generation of my grandfather was known as the best generation for a reason. They stood up for what was right, and accepted nothing less. If someone acted a fool or failed to make good on a promise, they were held accountable for it. I do not know when the military changed it's standard and deemed the current conduct acceptable, but it will never be acceptable in my mind.
In my mind, the military, not to mention the Alaska National Guard, with all it's rich heritage and history, should present a better image than that. I learned the Army Values in basic training. Loyalty. Duty. Respect. Selfless Service. Honor. Integrity. Personal Cou rage. I never would have imagined those values would become notional, only used on the recruiting commercials. The AGR's (guardsmen who have a full-time active job working for the National Guard) have developed a system of good-ol-boy back scratching where they take care of each other, only to trample all over the M-Day soldiers. They fail to realize, that as AGR's, they have a job solely to support the M-Day soldier that comprises the vast majority of the unit. They are too busy browsing The Chive or their Facebook accounts to ensure that the citizen soldiers who sacrifice so much for the unit are at least getting the compensation they are promised, compensation which is a mere fraction of the compensation for the very limited work the AGR's perform. The AGR's have forgotten what it is like to be an M-Day soldier, to have to scrape for every hour at their civilian job, just to make a meager income, trying to make ends meet. They forget that they get paid twice what most M-Day soldiers make in their civilian job, while doing half the work. They don't appreciate the fact they get that paycheck regardless of what time they show up, leave, or how long a lunch they take. When they turn a weekend drill into a Friday, Saturday, and Sunday drill with less than a month's notice, threatening soldiers with AWOL if they do not attend that Friday drill after they have already told their civilian employer, who pays far more, they could work. When they expect soldiers to turn their normal half hour lunch break into an hour and a half lunch break to meet their wants, causing that solider to miss out on an extra hour of pay, which, of course, the unit won't compensate for. For some of us, that extra hour is a day worth of fuel in our boiler keeping our families warm at night, or a dinner on the table to help our children grow. Many of the AGR's cannot even legitimately pass an Army Physical Fitness Test, often times faking the numbers so they are allowed to keep th eir job and get promoted to ranks they do not deserve and lower the standard that much more. These practices are not just the practices of one, but the majority. They are not only accepted by the chain of command in BOI/PR, but rewarded with illegitimate promotions. I am quickly learning why it is so common to hear so many locals in BOI/PR talk down about the military, and I just wish there was something I could do to change it. Hopefully with your help something can be done to change it. The tendency among the AGR's is to squirt a bit of oil on the squeaky wheels such as myself in order to quiet it down, only to resume pushing the cart through the mud puddle. Perhaps the problem is not the wheel, but the individual pushing the cart.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE No. 14-149

Governor Releases National Guard Report, Adjutant General Out
Calls for Special Team to Restore Respect and Responsibility

September 4, 2014, Anchorage, Alaska – Following the conclusion of a six-month independent review and assessment of open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard, Governor Sean Parnell released the findings today, and took the resignation of the adjutant general, Major General Thomas H. Katkus. The governor originally requested the assessment from the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in February.

The report found Guard members have a lack of trust and confidence in the Alaska National Guard leadership's ability to handle sexual assault cases and other misconduct. Further, the report found that favoritism, ethical misconduct and fear of reprisal have eroded trust and confidence in Guard leadership.

"The dedicated men and women who serve in the Alaska National Guard deserve better and I am committed to restoring the trust they are entitled to," Governor Parnell said. "While the report's findings are deeply troubling, I know that the overwhelming majority of Alaska National Guard personnel serve admirably and honorably. We will take all necessary steps to ensure respect, responsibility and trust are restored."

Governor Parnell requested and received the resignation of Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general, and commissioner of Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. Brigadier General Mike Bridges will serve as acting commissioner on an interim basis until a new adjutant general is named. The governor will also closely examine the command structure within the Alaska National Guard, which will include further staffing changes.

Governor Parnell requested the National Guard Bureau's help in assembling a team to implement the recommendations in the report to restore a healthy and safe working environment for the men and women of the Guard. The governor has requested the OCI provide personnel to assist with implementing the recommendations outlined in the report. The team will include a representative from the Office of the Governor.

The governor has requested a further investigation into allegations of fraud pertaining to the misuse of Guard assets.

A copy of the report from the Office of Complex Investigations is available at:

Reporters who have follow up questions for the Guard Bureau may contact Rick Breitenfeldt at (703) 601 6767 or (703) 627 7273.

Dear BOI/PR,

I again apologize that we did not receive your message until last week; I can certainly understand your frustration. Our office was distressed to learn than many constituent messages had not been received, keeping us from providing answers and assistance, as we work to do every day for Alaskans. Unfortunately, the system problem occurring at the time you wrote prevented messages longer than 4,000 characters from being delivered to us. The level of detail you provided in your message put it over that threshold, and regrettably, we did not receive the information in a timely matter. We very much regret this circumstance, and the problem has been fixed so it will not occur again in the future.

Though we are confident that the webform on our site is fixed and fully functional, please know that you can always send a message from your email account directly to governor@alaska.gov if you want to contact the Governor by email in the future. This traditional email account works separately from the webform, and also allows word documents or other files to be attached.

As you may know, Governor Parnell received the National Guard Bureau's report this week and released it to the public yesterday. I have attached a copy of the press release which includes a link to the report. Governor Parnell also asked for and received Major General Katkus' resignation. The Governor is assembling a team to implement the recommendations of the National Guard Bureau, and further evaluation and investigation is ongoing.

I am copying Governor Parnell's Deputy Chief of Staff Cindy Sims in this message. She will be able to speak to you regarding the circumstances you raised and may be able to provide answers to questions that you have. Mrs. Sims will be in touch with you soon at the number you provided, or you can feel free to contact our office at 907-451-2920.

On behalf of our office, we are deeply grateful for your military service to our state and nation in harm's way, protecting our freedoms.

You're kidding me, right? Of the four politicians I wrote, your office is the ONLY one who never responded. Then when you do, I get the Lois Lerner "Oh, our computer screwed up" excuse. No, the issue is not resolved. His separation board was BOI/PR and he is STILL in the guard. I am very interested to see what was in the NGB OCI's report, IF it ever becomes public. I would love to speak about this ongoing issue over the phone, as in email it would be far too long of a conversation. Please have someone from your office, preferably someone who can give me answers, call me at BOI/PR.

BOI/PR

I have served my country for the past BOI/PR years, the first BOI/PR as an active duty soldier based at Ft. Wainwright, and the last BOI/PR as an Alaska Army National Guardsman based out of BOI/PR. Over these past BOI/PR years, I have not only been through, but excelled through countless trials and tribulations the vast populous can never begin to imagine. I completed one tour in BOI... in BOI/PR, where I saw my brethren permanently scarred and disfigured. I completed some of the Army's toughest, most demanding training in some of the harshest climates. I missed my first-born child's first birthday. My knees cause me constant pain from the countless miles of running and ruck marching. My left hip pops every time I move it, causing pain from the IED (improvised explosive device) that bashed my left side against the truck I was riding in. My ears constantly ring, causing seriously degraded hearing from all the rounds, not only that I have fired, but also the ones cracking over my head, because fortunately the insurgent sniper was not as good a shot as he thought.

All that said, if you were to ask me if I would do it over again, my answer, without hesitation would be an emphatic "I absolutely would!" because I have also had countless life-altering positive accomplishments. I will forever have the pride and satisfaction that I voluntarily stood up to serve my country in a time of war on multiple fronts and survived. I have gotten to travel the world, even if most of the places I have been were desolate wastelands. I have made bonds with friends, brothers that no number of miles can break. I have learned skills so few people get the opportunity to see first-hand let alone master. I have seen the stuff movies are made of. I have felt the concussion of explosions, both friendly and enemy, and I will forever know that almost child-like excitement that comes with it.

Unfortunately the past year and a half of my military career has brought a sour note to my service, not because of my own misdeeds, but those of others. About BO... years ago, I decided to change my MOS (military occupational specialty) from BOI/PR to BOI/PR. When I did, my new supervisor became BOI/PR. It became obvious early on that we seemingly had a lot in common. We were both prior infantry, both sniper trained, and both had an "old-military" mentality of accountability and integrity above all else. I flourished in my new role as a BOI/PR, and established myself as the non-commissioned officer best suited to take over the role of BOI/PR when my supervisor went to a d ifferent position in the unit. In BOI/PR I was in BOI/PR completing the necessary training for my new MOS when rumors started flying that my wife was supposedly having an inappropriate relationship with BOI/PR. My wife caught word of it, and immediately told me about the rumors. I reported it to BOI/PR, and he quickly put the blame for the rumors on the wife of another NCO in my section and dismissed it as purely rumors based on jealousy because I was going to take over as BOI/PR. That NCO and his family had, until then, been very close with my family and I, and after learning of BOI/PR's findings, we regrettably had a falling out, keeping our relationship strictly professional. I returned from BOI/PR, got promoted, and became the

BOI/PR.

Fast forward to BOI/PR at our annual training in BOI/PR. While my section and I were up at our observation point for three days doing a live fire exercise, I ha d an opportunity to have a serious talk with the NCO mentioned earlier regarding what had happened back in BOI/PR. He told me that there was a lot more that my wife was not telling me, and that it had been bothering him since our falling out. He told me he could no longer keep the information he had to himself. He told me they had screen shots of text message conversations between my wife and his wife, where my wife detailed some of the things BOI/PR had been saying and doing behind my back. He was hesitant to give me specific details, for fear of reviving prior conflicts, but told me that I should have a serious conversation with my wife.

When I got home I finally convinced my wife to come clean and tell me what she had been hiding from me for so long. She told me he had done things ranging from excessive complimenting to inappropriate touching, all the way up to pressuring my wife into telling him she loved him. He would regularly tell her things like "You look smoking hot." and "I only used BOI/PR to get close to you." and "If you stick with me, I will make sure your husband flies through the ranks." She told me he was constantly sending her text messages and would not stop. She told me that he had pressured her into telling him she loved him. She told me the only reason she hadn't told me sooner was because he used his rank and position to intimidate her and held my promotion over her head.

I got on my cell phone provider's website to substantiate what my wife had told me. I found that several months had hundreds, and sometimes thousands of text messages between BOI/PR and my wife. They told me it was at PEC and NGB in Washington D.C. and that it should be deposited within a couple of weeks. A month later, and in true keeping of my unit's style, with no follow-up or communication as promised, I asked again, about my bonus. Three days later, I received a phone call from my commander stating that my bonus was still at PEC and NGB being reviewed. I am obviously getting nowhere with my unit, so I have decided to reach out to you. I truly hope that you can help me sort out what is going on with my bonus, and perhaps gain more ground than my unit is willing to attempt.

As I said earlier, I have served BOI/PR years in the military, and never once have I even gotten so much as a negative counselling statement. I do my best to set the example and uphold the highest standards. In the course of less than a year I have brought my section from a circus in shambles to the shining star of the brigade at our last annual training. My subordinates would do anything for me, because they know I would do anything for them. Perhaps that is just the mindset and mentality instilled in me by my grandfather, the World War 2 veteran. Perhaps I should be a bit more willing to change and adapt to the times, but in my mind, the generation of my grandfather was known as the best generation for a reason. They stood up for what was right, and accepted nothing less. If someone acted a fool or failed to make good on a promise, they were held accountable for it. I do not know when the military changed it's standard and deemed the current conduct acceptable, but it will never be acceptable in my mind. In my mind, the military, not to mention the Alaska National Guard, with all it's rich heritage and history, should present a better image than that. I learned the Army Values in basic training. Loyalty. Duty. Respect. Selfless Service. Honor. Integrity. Personal Cou rage. I never would have imagined those values would become notional, only used on the recruiting commercials. The AGR's (guardsmen who have a full-time active job working for the National Guard) have developed a system of good-ol-boy back scratching where they take care of each other, only to trample all over the M-Day soldiers. They fail to realize, that as AGR's, they have a job solely to support the M-Day soldier that comprises the vast majority of the unit. They are too busy browsing The Chive or their Facebook accounts to ensure that the citizen soldiers who sacrifice so much for the unit are at least getting the compensation they are promised, compensation which is a mere fraction of the compensation for the very limited work the AGR's perform. The AGR's have forgotten what it is like to be an M-Day soldier, to have to scrape for every hour at their civilian job, just to make a meager income, trying to make ends meet. They forget that they get paid twice what most M-Day soldiers make in their civilian job, while doing half the work. They don't appreciate the fact they get that paycheck regardless of what time they show up, leave, or how long a lunch they take. When they turn a weekend drill into a Friday, Saturday, and Sunday drill with less than a month's notice, threatening soldiers with AWOL if they do not attend that Friday drill after they have already told their civilian employer, who pays far more, they could work. When they expect soldiers to turn their normal half hour lunch break into an hour and a half lunch break to meet their wants, causing that solider to miss out on an extra hour of pay, which, of course, the unit won't compensate for. For some of us, that extra hour is a day worth of fuel in our boiler keeping our families warm at night, or a dinner on the table to help our children grow. Many of the AGR's cannot even legitimately pass an Army Physical Fitness Test, often times faking the numbers so they are allowed to keep th eir job and get promoted to ranks they do not deserve and lower the standard that much more. These practices are not just the practices of one, but the majority. They are not only accepted by the chain of command in BOI/PR, but rewarded with illegitimate promotions. I am quickly learning why it is so common to hear so many locals in BOI/PR talk down about the military, and I just wish there was something I could do to change it. Hopefully with your help something can be done to change it. The tendency among the AGR's is to squirt a bit of oil on the squeaky wheels such as myself in order to quiet it down, only to resume pushing the cart through the mud puddle. Perhaps the problem is not the wheel, but the individual pushing the cart.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE No. 14-149

Governor Releases National Guard Report, Adjutant General Out
Calls for Special Team to Restore Respect and Responsibility

September 4, 2014, Anchorage, Alaska – Following the conclusion of a six-month independent review and assessment of open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard, Governor Sean Parnell released the findings today, and took the resignation of the adjutant general, Major General Thomas H. Katkus. The governor originally requested the assessment from the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in February.

The report found Guard members have a lack of trust and confidence in the Alaska National Guard leadership's ability to handle sexual assault cases and other misconduct. Further, the report found that favoritism, ethical misconduct and fear of reprisal have eroded trust and confidence in Guard leadership.

"The dedicated men and women who serve in the Alaska National Guard deserve better and I am committed to restoring the trust they are entitled to," Governor Parnell said. "While the report's findings are deeply troubling, I know that the overwhelming majority of Alaska National Guard personnel serve admirably and honorably. We will take all necessary steps to ensure respect, responsibility and trust are restored."

Governor Parnell requested and received the resignation of Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general, and commissioner of Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. Brigadier General Mike Bridges will serve as acting commissioner on an interim basis until a new adjutant general is named. The governor will also closely examine the command structure within the Alaska National Guard, which will include further staffing changes.

Governor Parnell requested the National Guard Bureau's help in assembling a team to implement the recommendations in the report to restore a healthy and safe working environment for the men and women of the Guard. The governor has requested the OCI provide personnel to assist with implementing the recommendations outlined in the report. The team will include a representative from the Office of the Governor.

The governor has requested a further investigation into allegations of fraud pertaining to the misuse of Guard assets.

A copy of the report from the Office of Complex Investigations is available at:

BOI/PR

Thank you for taking the time to write and share your thoughts and concerns. I will be sure Governor Parnell sees your email.

Please be assured that Governor Parnell's request for General Katkus' resignation is just one part of this effort and we are committed to seeing this through completely. I have attached the press release Governor Parnell put out yesterday, which also has a link to the full report. If you have not done so, I encourage you to read the press release as you will see the Governor's words that this "will include further staffing changes."

This thorough assessment has provided us a starting point to go after the problems within the Alaska National Guard. We are working to assemble the right team of people to further look into the findings presented and to start working through the recommendations. I am confident this process and the continuing changes will make our Alaska National Guard better and stronger.

We take your concerns and statements in your email very seriously, and I appreciate your candor with us. If you wish to talk on the phone, I am always available. You can reach me at our office line or my cell phone is [BOI]. We have so many wonderful people working within our Guard and we are committed to restoring the trust in leadership within the Guard that you each deserve. You have our word that we will not stop!

As I stated earlier, feel free to call me if you have any further questions or concerns.

Take care,
Cindy

Subject: Guard investigation

Good morning

I was one of the individuals interviewed by OCI for this report. Although I agree with the findings of the report and I wholeheartedly support the demand for Katkus' resignation, I'm terrified that this will stop here.

Katkus should not only resign his position, he should be stripped of his commission and any retirement. The toxic command enviroment has been exposed and acknowledged and he presided over it for five years. Does it make sense to allow him to profit from that? Of course not. He did not start it but he perpetuated the current system and even thrived with it.

And for the love of God, DO NOT STOP! Katkus has been removed from his position. Get him out of the Guard! Immediately! Show the soldiers and airmen that this is not going to be, yet another cover up. General or not, Katkus had to have a support system to allow him to 'rule' the Guard. Every officer in the Army Guard, at least, needs to be thoroughly investigated by an outside legal team, along with every First Sergeant and Sergeant Major. These people all rose to their current ranks by working with the existing corrupt system and most own their allegiance to the same.

And lest you think this is just an administrative problem, ask the soldiers that deployed to BOI/PR. We suffered for a full year under the very definition of 'toxic command enviroment' and when we returned we could not get the Guard to even investigate. They actually started taking statements and then just stopped. No explanations. Now I'm stuck trying to explain to soldiers why nothing has happened. The command new about the problems while we were deployed and got an ear full from us when we returned, but took no action. And the worst part is, the biggest perpetrator was put back into his old position of being BOI/PR. Is this someone to be trusted to train future leaders?

Tell the governor that this resignation is a start, but only that. Please consider removing all the upper leaders from the Guard. That is the ONLY way this corruption will stop. Bring in officers and senior NCOs from out of state and allow them to restart the chain of command within the regs of the Army Guard.

The corruption does not stop at MG Katkus. As an Army Guard Soldier I believe you should appoint an Air Guard TAG with the mission of cleaning up the corruption in the Army. The worst possible thing you can do to restore trust in the Alaska Guard is to appoint BG Jorgenson as the next TAG. She is part of the problem. She isn't part of the sexual assault problem but she wields power to reward her friends and punish her enemies. To give you specifics would reveal my unit, but I hope her name has already come up in Command Climate surveys.

Dear Ms Tepas -

I notice that you were once a member of the Alaska State Troopers.

I just wanted to say that your handling of the reports of rape and sexual assault in the Alaska National Guard is, to say the least, disgraceful.

I have an inkling of what you're trying to cover up here, and it starts with a woman named [BOI/PR].

Do you know who she was ?

She came to Ken Blaylock seeking protection from one of her fellow Guard members, and two days later she was found dead

DEAD Ms Tepas, as in not living anymore.

She [BOI/PR] too.

You should be ashamed of how you handled this situation, so ashamed that I would think that you would resign your position immediately.

The silver lining in all of this is that come November, Sean Parnell and his crew of morally bankrupt cohorts, including yourself, will be sent packing, looking for new jobs.

That is the best that I can hope for at this point, because I know beyond a shadow of a doubt that you will continue to do nothing in the search for truth and justice in the case of [BOI].

Disgusted,

National Guard Bureau, NGB-IG
Jefferson Plaza 1, Suite 11600

SEP - 2 2014
DEFENSE DEPARTMENT

Dear Sir or Ma'am:

I write to you out of frustration over the lack of information provided to the victims involved in the "investigations" regarding the misconduct of the Alaska National Guard. I am a victim of the Alaska National Guard sexual assault "cover ups". I was sexually assaulted in my BOI/PR while a member of the Alaska National Guard. I don't know who my perpetrator is due to a combination of BOI/PR I do, however, know that my experience in the aftermath of my assault from members of the Alaska National Guard caused further traumatizing thought processes and resulted in extremely delayed mental health treatment for me, BOI/PR to be precise.

I've been privy to many "unofficial" updates regarding the status of various "investigations" wherein the current status being that NGB opened investigations from both the Office of the IG as well as Complex Investigations. To my knowledge, or lack thereof, both cases have been closed. I was never contacted by either office.

I was, however, contacted by LTC Jane Wawersik of the Alaska National Guard after my last interview B... BOI/PR when I voiced that I had yet to be contacted by anyone involved in the investigations or in any official capacity. She listened to a majority of "my story" as well as my concerns. She then issued me an "unofficial" apology on behalf of the Alaska National Guard for the way I was treated. Although I am sure her intentions were pure, an apology from anyone other than those involved or the TAG himself is of little comfort and holds no weight. LTC Wawersik also provided me with the contact information for the investigators that were currently occupying space at the FT Richardson USPFO building. I did not contact them as I felt it should be their duty to contact me directly in the capacity of a proper investigation. No contact was made from those investigators.

In this instance, what investigation can be truly complete without contacting any and all potential witnesses? To my knowledge subsequent investigations have been opened by vertical echelons that I am not able to confirm that I was part of. Information that I've been provided, from anonymous sources, causes me great concern, however. Apparently comments were made by investigators, from these higher echelons, regarding the criminal background of some of the victims. To me, these comments imply that the investigators are attempting to discredit the accusations made by victims of the Alaska National Guard sexual assault "cover ups". Discrediting a witness is usually a tactic used by the opposing side in litigation. Should I take from this that these investigators are against the victims instead of trying to help?

If these comments were in fact made I ask why? Does the fact that someone BOI/PR make them more deserving of being assaulted or less deserving of being treated with dignity and respect from their chain of command when seeking assistance for sexual assault? I have BOI/PR, which I disclosed during initial entry and again during my secret security application. Does this mean I am less credible as a victim?

I hold an exemplary military record. I was BOI/PR which my drill sergeants can attest to. I was the BOI/PR BOI/PR I've received multiple awards for my service both stateside and during my BOI/PR I've also heen directly involved, as a result of my BOI/PR BOI/PR BOI/PR What does it take to he regarded as credihle in the eyes of investigators?

I have been asked recently by the Secretary of the Army IG Assistance Office, which did not inform me that I was bound hy confidentiality, whether or not I "wanted" an investigation into the mistreatment hy the Alaska National Guard regarding my sexual assault. My response was "yes". I was informed that there would not he an investigation into my actual assault as I was BOI/PR at the time. To this I respond that I've never asked for an investigation into my assault. I know I don't have any information that would result in a conviction. I was drugged, raped and sought medical care for the purpose of peace of mind that I was not infected with an STD. My records of ever being at the BOI/PR Hospital where I was treated have not heen located to this day. Aside from my discharge paperwork that I kept and the counseling statement from my commander at the time, there is no evidence of me being there. If there was a rape kit done there is no documentation of it ever existing either as hoth myself and several others have thoroughly inquired after. There is also no file from the AKARNG SARC Office regarding my sexual assault. Testimony has heen made on my behalf from a SARC liaison that can validate the lack of evidence and report from BOI/PR and confirm that one should have been created. Somctimes lack of evidence is evidence in itself.

To this date the only form of closure that I've received is from my LOD investigation that was initiatcd hy the Illinois National Guard SARC Office on my behalf as a result of my BOI/PR BOI/PR My initial LOD was denied for lack of evidence which instigated an appeal from me that included counseling statements during the time period immediately following my assault, the BOI/PR Hospital discharge form, and testimony offered hy BOI/PR My LOD appeal was approved within days after suhmission.

My question in this instance is "How can a United States government office admit, in an official capacity, that what happened to me was incurred or aggravated in the LOD hut the same organization fail to contact me as a witness in related Investigations?"

Aside from the questions that I've posed in this letter I am asking for closure and justice on this matter. I would like a full acknowledgement and apology from the Alaska National Guard, in writing, to each victim relating to these investigations. I would also like a proper and full investigation into the claims made hy myself and fellow sexual assault victims into the handling of sexual assault reports made from BOI/PR to present to ensure policy and procedures were followed. I ask that if actions taken, by the then chain of command, did not comply with policy and procedurc that punitive action, up and to include

UCMJ action, be taken against those involved. I ask that future policies, procedures, and training are implemented, and enforced, to prevent any further psychological damage to present and any future victims. I ask that a final full disclosure report is issued to each victim in regards to the outcome of such investigations so that closure and healing can commence for all victims involved.

Respectfully,

BOI/PR

Hi, Cindy, I made an offer to Tara based on our experience providing both training to the Alaska National Guard (dealing with change; workplace bullying) and our experience providing EEO and anti-harassment training (for 30 years). We'd be glad to offer the state discounted assistance. Governor Parnell and Elizabeth Giardana both know me. Thanks.

Hi Sharon,

I'm heading over to the noon press conference where a National Guard sexual assault survivor will be sharing her story. Based on the release, she is calling on the Governor to be held accountable for "perpetuating and exacerbating a culture of violence in the Guard."

Is the Governor available for an interview following the press conference? If not, can a statement be made available? I don't want this story to be one sided especially if she calls the Governor out.

Thanks so much,

Pls see if you can schedule a phone call between me and DP/EP whose contact info is below. If I could speak with him this afternoon, that would be great. If not, I understand and I would like to set a time as soon as possible. When asked what this is about, just say I am following through on a National Guard Bureau recommendation.

Sir,

I wish to bring to your attention corruption in Ft Greely. Due to the recent events with Gen Katkus I believe you should come down here and investigate as well. Punshiments that are not equal, incidents being swept under the rug and soldiers afraid to speak out.

Thank you for your time

Cindy, our office reviewed our files as they relate to BOI/PR/FPA

* BOI/PR/FPA states that she was assaulted in BOI/... , and does not know who her attacker is. She stated that although she reported the assault there was no record of her report. OCI confirmed with the current SARC that there was in fact no record of her reported assault. The SARC learned of the assault in BOI/P... during the course of a 15-6 into misconduct within BOI/PR/FPA . The SARC gave her contact info to the investigating officer to provide to the victim several times but reports that the victim never contacted her.

* BOI/PR/FPA states she had OCIs information while the team was in AK but did not contact them. While OCI was aware of her allegation (due to the 15-6) they had no contact information for BOI/PR/FPA . The Team does not directly reach out to victims but as a matter of protocol goes through the SARC or VA. Had BOI/PR/FPA contacted OCI they would have taken her statement as well as ensured she had access to the current State SARC.

* All allegations of sexual assault are investigated, while this case would admittedly be challenging, there is nothing that would prevent OCI or local law enforcement from investigating this case notwithstanding the time that has lapsed.

* BOI/PR/FPA comments regarding process of handling sexual assault cases is valid and was in part the impetus behind the establishment of the Special Victim Counsel program.

* Additionally her comments regarding actions by investigators that questioned the credibility of victims have also been an issue in the Services. To prevent internal investigations from investigators untrained in sexual assault from occurring the CNGB mandated that commander not conduct their own investigation but rather refer the matter to local law enforcement or military criminal investigations or, when the referral is denied, to NGB-OCI.

* Appropriate officials recently (within the last few days/weeks) met with BOI/PR/FPA to inquire as to what more they can do to assist her. She wants her prior supervisors to be held accountable BOI/PR/FPA . It was determined that only one of these individuals is still in the AKNG. The victim also wanted to ensure that the command established a policy on BOI/PR/FPA . OCI concurs and this was specifically addressed in BOI/PR/FPA .

* In her letter she asks for an investigation into how cases were handled for the last 10 years, OCI did this.

* Our office learned that BG Bridges did meet with BOI/PR/FPA on BOI/PR/FPA to discuss her case but is unaware of the details.

With the above said, if she is interested in making an unrestricted report the SARC will take it. Please let me know if you would like to discuss.

We received the following post on the Governor's FB wall last week. Sharon advised me to send it to you for a response. Let me know if there is anything else you need me to do. Additionally there are some posts asking the Governor's stance on Common Core- not sure if it is something we need to respond to or not, but it might be nice.

FROM: Eduardo Prieto, SFC, AK, ARNG

Subject: ARNG Substandard treatment of soldiers, Unethical conduct, Corruption, Knavish actions by investigators, Immoral leadership, Trying to conceal the truth

Earlier today the Alaska National Guard received the news that MG Tom Katkus resigned as the Director of the DMVA. This is a great step in the right direction but it is important to understand what is not said in this report. The Office of Complex Investigations compiled a report that outlines a great deal of inappropriate actions by many of the senior leaders in the AKNG. However, some of the information contained in this report is designed to create misdirection and place blame on others. Here is a list of Officers and Senior NCOS that have played a direct role in this conspiracy and their relation to the key leaders.

BOI/PR

It was the right move to ask for the resignation of MG Katkus but what you may not be fully aware of is how far down this actually started. He is accountable for what happens in his command and due to the fact that he was made aware of these issues makes him culpable. The majority of the illegal investigations, inappropriate conduct, and favoritism starts with BG Bridges and BG Jorgensen. If you are not part of their group of friends then it is a clear indicator that you will come under investigation. BG Jorgensen controls what is happening in this state despite being subordinate to Bridges. He reacts to what is given to him.

Bridges – openly discussed the details of an investigation to personnel who were not privileged to the information and violated the privacy and civil liberties of all involved. His conduct was observed by several junior soldiers who were attending a sexual harassment briefing.

Jorgensen – in the report it talks about an incident of fraud where a soldier took money from the family programs account. What this report did not disclose was she was the manager of this program and due to her negligence or incompetence this was allowed to happen. The fraud was discovered almost immediately after she was moved to a new position. Additionally, BG Jorgensen has single handily destroyed the superior to subordinate relationship within the AKNG. She has lobbied for investigations against numerous male soldiers but turned a blind eye to felony actions of female soldiers; as long as they would assist in the persecution of her enemies. She gave detailed and false information about pending investigations to the OCI team in the hopes to discredit any statements that could be made against her.

BOI/PR – during the Jorgensen inquisitions there were two key players in her goals of ruining careers and families. BOI/PR into several NCOs conduct. She allowed BOI/PR in any way, ILLEGAL, she wanted. Some of her violations included but were not limited to: coercion, writing statements for witnesses, offering immunity from investigation, violations of the Privacy Act, violations of Civil Liberties, failure to notify witnesses of their rights (5th amendment or Article 31), and most importantly had several Soldiers arrested by BOI/PR Anchorage Police Department. She used her connections there to secure illegal documentation and conduct illegal and unauthorized investigations by members of the Guard who were BOI/PR , BOI/PR also had a big part in the investigations into several key officers who could discredit BG Jorgensen and Bridges. He on multiple occasions wrote statements for witnesses that contained information that was never said during interviews, were direct misquotes, and were written to destroy the careers of male officers.

BOI/PR for the Army National Guard he has conducted himself in a way that his conduct should be called into question. During several administrative boards he was the BOI/PR for the boards. His job was to BOI/PR . However, his conduct showed a completely different agenda. He clearly was working in support of the state and railroaded the defense of several soldiers. He allowed information to be presented that was proven to be untrue, allowed testimony that was of no bearing to the cases but was prejudicial to the defense, and ruled against the defense in every motion. The honorable service of many Seniors NCOs are being destroyed because of his allegiance to BG Jorgensen.

BOI/PR – as the BOI/PR for the AKNG she was charged with the development and voice of the enlisted members of the Guard. She has failed to do this because of her incompetence and failure as an NCO. She bows to the will of Jorgensen who has carried her along with her from their assignment as the BOI/PR . BOI/PR on numerous occasions has been the person who contacts NCOs to offer deals on the behalf of Jorgensen. The Soldiers of the AKNG deserve a leader who will do what is right not what is easy.

BOI/PR in a plea deal. He was offered a deal in exchange for his predetermined statements against Jorgensen's enemies. BOI/PR has been the subject of multiple investigations both at BOI/PR. These investigations include sleeping with his former Soldier's wife (photo evidence was received by the investigator), condoning sexual misconduct while at BOI/PR, paying for an abortion while his wife was deployed, having an inappropriate relationship with a female SPC within his Battalion, dereliction of duty, actions unbecoming of a Senior NCO, and numerous other acts.

I applaud you for your initial efforts in cleaning up the guard and it was the right move to ask for Katkus' resignation. However, the job is far from over. BOI/PR is being characterized as a person who has brought a great deal of this to light but the truth be told she followed every order that was given to her without question. If an order is unlawful she had an obligation to do what was right. Her conduct during her investigations should be called into question and her favorable assignment to the Office of Complex Investigations should be looked into. This assignment was secured by BG Jorgensen. I have placed my name on this document because I am tired of the mistreatment and actions of this command. If I am such a horrible Soldier then please explain why BG Jorgensen, BOI/PR keep offering me a deal to write a statement that is "creative" and can help end the careers of their enemies. I have not taken any deal and will not trade my value on friendship for the favor of a criminal.

Sharon,

Last week a SFC Eduardo Prieto responded to the National Guard report on the Governor's Facebook page. It is quite lengthy and makes several accusations against the AKNG leadership. Should we respond to his in any way, or should we forward this to the Ben, or just leave it be? It's well written, though I am not sure how credible the writer is.

MESSAGE:
I commend you on your choice of Lieutenant Govenor, Craig Campbell. I recently retired from the Alaska Army National Guard and have always respected Maj Gen Campbells Leadership. Your gain is the AK Army National Guards loss. I have heard numerous rumors on your selection for the Adjutant Generals appointment and now that I am officially retired, felt I could finally voice my opinion. There are many choices of qualified people for this very important position, but I am concerned that BG Katkus is one of the top contenders. I would like to bring to your attention that as of two months ago, he was under investigation by the Department of the Army Inspector General. I do not know if this investigation has been completed yet. Additionally, if you ask the National Guard for the number of Senior Non-commissioned Officers and Senior Officers that have left the Alaska Army National Guard in the last 12 months, I think you will see an alarming trend. Those of us who have left, chose to because of the unethical leadership by BG Katkus. I spent over BOI years in the Alaska Guard and it is very disheartening to end my career on such a low note. I did retire knowing I did the right thing for the right reasons and the right time, and earned the respect of our Soldiers. I followed the rules and regulations which is why BG Katkus wanted me gone. His philosophy is make it happen and we will deal with the consequences later. BG Katkus wanted Soldiers in Kosovo promoted illegally (his son is in the unit in Kosovo) but never once addressed the promotions, legal or not of our Soldiers in Iraq and Afghanastan. I can prove any accusation I make, but mainly wanted you to hear from a concerned Alaskan with first hand experience that BG Katkus does not have the morals or ethics to be the Commander of the Alaska Army National Guard. Thank you for your time.

I was in the AK Army National Guard from 1984 until I retired as a BOI in 2009. I am so relieved MG Katkus is gone and can no longer hurt Soldiers. If you check your records I wrote to you in the past and encouraged you not to keep him as the TAG. The hurt and spin this man has caused is far beyond all the cover ups.

My next concern is BG Jorgensen. I worked directly for her my last 3 years in the Guard. I was full time (AGR). She is self surviving and as corrupt as MG Katkus. I personally witnessed her go on Trips (TDY) paid for by the Military for no other reason than to see her son who was attending college out of state. This can be verified by going through her travel records. She b elieved in "tele-a-work" which meant working from home, but that only applied to her and no one that worked for her. One time when we tried to contact her while she was "working" from home she was actually at their property I believe is in Talkeetna. When MG Katkus ordered us to do some promotions that were illegal, instead of standing up to him and standing up for me and refusing, she waited until I was on convalescent leave and did the promotions. She directly is responsible for the mismanagement of AGR control grades which includes letting CSM Choate take a full time E9 position out of state with him. Additionally AK has never been authorized 3 full time Generals. Our personnel numbers in th Army Guard do not support it, so exactly how fid she manage to get herself a full time BG position. Anyone with some military background in personnel can verify every item in this email. Additionally she was in charge of recruiting when all the incidents happened that are currently being investigated and she did nothing to stop any of it. Govenor you have an opportunity to clean house and provide a new beginning for our Soldiers and Airmen. Please release BG Joegensen immediately. Bring in an outsider and restore the faith in our Soldiers and Airman.

I would also like to add that I have seen the petition for COL Osborn to be the next TAG. While I think he is a nice guy, I have never worked under him to know his leadership capabilities, but I am aware of three(3) DUI's while in the military. I do not think that sets a very good example.

National Guard Bureau

General Officer Management Office, Arlington, VA

BRIGADIER GENERAL JON K. MOTT

Assistant Adjutant General - Air, Connecticut National Guard

Brigadier General Jon K. Mott is Assistant Adjutant General - Air, Connecticut National Guard. He is responsible to The Adjutant General for providing operationally trained, equipped and mission ready forces in support of both federal mobilization requirements and state emergency operations. On behalf of The Adjutant General, he implements policies, programs and plans affecting more than 1,100 personnel and is the direct link to all state assigned Air National Guard resources providing information, evaluation, issue resolution and action recommendations.

General Mott received his commission via the Reserve Officer Training Corps at the Virginia Military Institute in 1982. Prior to his current assignment, General Mott was Vice Commander of the Air National Guard Readiness Center and Commander, 201st Mission Support Squadron, Joint Base Andrews, Maryland. In addition, he served as the Director, Plans and Requirements, Air National Guard. General Mott has commanded at the flight, squadron, group and wing level. He is a command pilot with 90 combat missions and over 4,800 total flight hours in the A-10. His combat sorties have been flown in support of Operation Deny Flight, Operation Allied Force and Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Hi Chris ... If we can get a teleconference this week for the Governor to meet General Mott before he actually comes to town, that would be great! The Governor's planned travel was cancelled today due to weather - so today will work for us the best; but we can also make Thursday work if that's better for you all. If we're able to get the teleconference done this week, we most likely will not need a meeting with the Governor on Monday - and you all could come Tuesday if that works better for your schedules.

From Mr.

BOI/PR

BOI/PR

Sir

My name is BOI/PR and I have information that you should know. In BOI/PR I was a BOI/... stationed with the BOI/PR. I was the BOI/PR of that unit. I have known MG Tom Katkus Since 2004 since he was a COL and the liaison officer between the GMD and the AKNG. BOI/PR While there, one of the BOI/PR who is still in the AKNG sexually assaulted BOI/PR at her job and sexually harassed her as well. What I am going to tell you now are the details of that crime and what happened after. BOI/PR BOI/PR I convinced BOI/PR that she needed to go forward and press charges because if he did it to her he would do it again. Now I need to stop here and make sure I say something important. BOI/PR had a change of command ceremony in may of 2006
AND WAS NOT INVOLVED IN ANY WAY. The incoming Commander, BOI/PR, was the BN CDR involved in this. When BOI/PR finally decided to file a complaint we went to the chain of command and filed a report with the DA Police on B... BOI/PR. During that time the chain of command did not do a proper investigation and swept it under the rug claiming that it was her word against his even though another female officer is on tape saying that he did it to her as well just a few months prior. The investigation ended the first week of December and we began our BOI/PR. One of the civilian employees had just retired from the army and was a BOI/PR while he served in uniform. When he arrived in B... BOI/PR in December he didn't have any cold weather boots and he was going to be outside as BOI/PR. so I signed for a 149 dollar pair of boots from the supply room and loaned them to him for the exercise with the intention of returning them in three days after he was done. Now here is something t hat I must say. When asked about it, I lied to my BOI/PR. I told him that I did not. I admitted it after the fact and I am being up front with you now. I did return the boots the same day. BOI/PR relieved me of all of my duties, suspended my security clearance, and began proceeding to kick me out of the Alaska NG. Exactly one day after I went to BG Katkus and told him what happened with BOI/PR. Prior to that day I was being considered for the BOI/PR for all of Alaska. BOI/PR was TDY during the boot incident but was there during the preceding sexual assault investigation. When he came back from TDY he told me things like, "don't worry about this, it is a small thing, it's a pair of boots.
It's a slap on the wrist. We'll send you BOI/PR and you can work BOI/PR and start taking over the BOI/PR duties." he kept saying those things until 62 days after he closed the sexual assault investigation BOI/PR had filed. The time for an appeal is 60. At that point he read me a relief for cause OER and fired me from my job and from the AKNG as well. When I went to MG Katkus again and said that this is all linked to the sexual assault complaint I was told I had no redress and neither did BOI/PR because it was beyond 60 days for the appeal. I am telling you all of this because I read what recently happened and saw that your report only went back to 2008. I just wanted you to know that the case involving BOI/PR and I was the VERY FIRST case involving MG Katkus and it was two years prior to the start of your investigation. Full disclosure time. BOI/PR BOI/PR and I moved to BOI/PR where I tried to join the BOI/PR and was denied because of the events in AK. I joined the BOI/PR and salvaged my career but lost a year of pay at BOI/... grade because of this. BOI/PR and I am now happily BOI/PR. I saw that BOI/PR is now a BOI/PR still with the AK Guard. I wouldn't keep him there. He got away with it twice for sure that I know of and I still have the tape of BOI/PR saying that he did it to her as well. I do not want to come back to Alaska for anything. I am BOI/PR away from retirement and I am going home to BOI/PR BOI/PR BOI/PR. I tell you all of this because there is a 2 year gap in your investigation between what I am sure is the first sexual assault case that MG Katkus was involved in back in 2006 just a few months after pinning on his first star and the beginning of your federal investigation. How many more victims are out there that you do not know about? You can call me at my number listed above if you would like further details BOI/PR, its my job to be thorough and accurate. I also learned B... years ago as a BOI/PR, keep all paper work so I did.

Very sincerely

BOI/PR

Mike

Is the draft bill attached something that the Alaska Guard could support?

NGAUS is holding off until it hears from you.

Also. Senator Begich has been approved for the Charles Dick award because of his support of the Guard but it has not been presented.

His office would like to have it presented in Alaska.

Mindful of the election, is the award presentation something the Alaska Guard supports?

We can wrestle with the logistic later if this is a go.

Thanks ,Mike, and good luck with all that you have on your plate out there.

2D SESSION

S. _____

To codify in law the establishment and duties of the Office of Complex Administrative Investigations in the National Guard Bureau, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BEGICH introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To codify in law the establishment and duties of the Office of Complex Administrative Investigations in the National Guard Bureau, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CODIFICATION IN LAW OF ESTABLISHMENT AND DUTIES OF THE OFFICE OF COMPLEX ADMINISTRATIVE INVESTIGATIONS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is in the Office of the Chief of the National Guard Bureau the Office of Complex Administrative Investigations (in this section referred to as the ''Office'').

(b) DIRECTION AND SUPERVISION.—The Office shall be under the direction and supervision of the Chief of the National Guard Bureau.

(c) DUTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The duties of the Office shall be to undertake complex administrative investigations of matters relating to members of the National Guard when in State status, including investigations of sexual assault involving a member of the National Guard in such status, upon the request of any of the following:

(A) The Chief of the National Guard Bureau.

(B) An adjutant general of a State or territory or the District of Columbia.

(C) The governor of a State or territory, or the Commanding General of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

(2) COMPLEX ADMINISTRATIVE INVESTIGATIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, a complex administrative investigation is any investigation (as specified by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau for purposes of this section) involving factors giving rise to unusual complexity in investigation, including the following:

(A) Questions of jurisdiction between the United States and a State or territory.

(B) Matters requiring specialized training among investigating officers.

(C) Matters raising the need for an independent investigation in order to ensure fairness and impartiality in investigation.

(3) MATTERS RELATING TO MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD IN STATE STATUS.—The determination whether or not a matter relates to a member of the National Guard when in State status for purposes of this section shall be made by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau in accordance with criteria specified by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau for purposes of this section.

(d) CHIEF OF NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU TREATMENT OF FINAL REPORTS.—The Chief of the National Guard Bureau shall treat any final report of the Office on a matter under this section as if such report were the report of an Inspector General of the Department of Defense or a military department on such matter.

(e) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(1) SUBMITTAL OF FINAL REPORTS TO CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATIONS.—Upon the adoption by the Office of a final report on an investigation undertaken by the Office pursuant to this section, the Chief of the National Guard Bureau shall submit such report (with any personally identifying information appropriately redacted) to the members of Congress from the State or territory concerned.

(2) ANNUAL REPORTS.—The Chief of the National Guard Bureau shall submit to Congress each year a report on the investigations undertaken by the Office pursuant to this section during the preceding year. Each report shall include, for the year covered by such report, the following:

(A) A summary description of the investigations undertaken during such year, including any trends in matters subject to investigation and in findings as a result of investigations.

(B) Information, set forth by State and territory, on the investigations undertaken during such year involving allegations of sexual assault involving a member of the National Guard.

(C) Such other information and matters on the investigations undertaken during such year as the Chief of the National Guard Bureau considers appropriate.

(f) PERSONNEL AND OTHER CAPABILITIES.—The Chief of the National Guard Bureau shall ensure that the Office maintains the personnel and other capabilities necessary for the discharge of the duties of the Office under this section.

(g) PROCEDURES AND INSTRUCTIONS.—The Chief of the National Guard Bureau shall issue, and may from time to time update, procedures and instructions necessary for the discharge of the duties of the Office under this section.

(h) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED INSTRUCTION.—Chief of the National Guard Bureau Instruction CNGBI 0400.01, dated July 30, 2012, shall have no further force or effect.

Importance: High

Dear Mr. BOI/PR,

Thank you for writing and sharing your experiences and concerns with Governor Parnell. I will be sure your email is shared with the Governor as well as the appropriate people in our office and the National Guard Bureau.

Governor Parnell is committed to restoring trust in our Alaska National Guard leadership, and we will continue working to bring transparency and accountability to the forefront of efforts within the National Guard. As the Governor has stated, we are looking into the current command structure, and there will be further staff changes. We are underway in our search for a new Adjutant General who can work with the special project team to delve into each issue brought forward so that our Alaska Guard members first feel they can discuss concerns or inappropriate actions with Guard leadership without fear of reprisal, and then that justice is served fairly and promptly.

Again, thank you for sending your email. If you have further questions or issues you wish to share with us, please do not hesitate to contact me personally at cindy.sims@alaska.gov or you can call my direct line at 907.269.7455.

My best wishes to you and your family,
Cindy

From Mr. BOI/PR

BOI/PR

Sir

My name is BOI/PR and I have information that you should know. In BOI/PR I was a BOI/... stationed with the BOI/PR. I was the BOI/PR of that unit. I have known MG Tom Katkus Since 2004 since he was a COL and the liaison officer between the GMD and the AKNG. BOI/PR. While there, one of the BO..., now BOI/... BOI/PR who is still in the AKNG sexually assaulted BOI/PR at her job and sexually harassed her as well. What I am going to tell you now are the details of that crime and what happened after. BOI/PR I convinced BOI/PR that she needed to go forward and press charges because if he did it to her he would do it again. Now I need to stop here and make sure I say something important. BOI/PR had a change of command ceremony in may of 2006 AND WAS NOT INVOLVED IN ANY WAY. The incoming Commander, BOI/PR, was the BN CDR involved in this. When BOI/PR finally decided to file a complaint we went to the chain of command and filed a report with the DA Police on BOI/PR. During that time the chain of command did not do a proper investigation and swept it under the rug claiming that it was her word against his even though another female officer is on tape saying that he did it to her as well just a few months prior. The investigation ended the first week of December and we began our BOI/PR. One of the civilian employees had just retired from the army and was a BOI/PR while he served in uniform. When he arrived in BOI/PR in December he didn't have any cold weather boots and he was going to be outside as BOI/PR. so I signed for a 149 dollar pair of boots from the supply room and loaned them to him for the exercise with the intention of returning them in three days after he was done. Now here is something t hat I must say. When asked about it, I lied to my BOI/PR. I told him that I did not. I admitted it after the fact and I am being up front with you now. I did return the boots the same day. BO... BOI/PRrelieved me of all of my duties, suspended my security clearance, and began proceeding to kick me out of the Alaska NG. Exactly one day after I went to BG Katkus and told him what happened with BOI/PR. Prior to that day I was being considered for the BOI/PR for all of Alaska. BOI/PR was TDY during the boot incident but was there during the preceding sexual assault investigation. When he came back from TDY he told me things like, "don't worry about this, it is a small thing, it's a pair of boots. It's a slap on the wrist. We'll send you BOI/PR and you can work BOI/PR and start taking over the BOI/PR duties." he kept saying those things until 62 days after he closed the sexual assault investigation BOI/PR had filed. The time for an appeal is 60. At that point he read me a relief for cause OER and fired me from my job and from the AKNG as well. When I went to MG Katkus again and said that this is all linked to the sexual assault complaint I was told I had no redress and neither did BOI/PR because it was beyond 60 days for the appeal. I am telling you all of this because I read what recently happened and saw that your report only went back to 2008. I just wanted you to know that the case involving BOI/PR and I was the VERY FIRST case involving MG Katkus and it was two years prior to the start of your investigation. Full disclosure time. BOI/PR and I moved to BOI/PR where I tried to join the BOI/PR and was denied because of the events in AK. I joined the BOI/PR and salvaged my career but lost a year of pay at BOI/... grade because of this. BOI/PR and I am now happily BOI/PR. I saw that BOI/PR is now a BOI/PR still with the AK Guard. I wouldn't keep him there. He got away with it twice for sure that I know of and I still have the tape of BOI/PR saying that he did it to her as well. I do not want to come back to Alaska for anything. I am BOI/PR away from retirement and I am going home to BOI/PR. I tell you all of this because there is a 2 year gap in your investigation between what I am sure is the first sexual assault case that MG Katkus was involved in back in 2006 just a few months after pinning on his first star and the beginning of your federal investigation. How many more victims are out there that you do not know about? You can call me at my number listed above if you would like further details B... BOI/PR, its my job to be thorough and accurate. I also learned BOI... years ago as a BOI/PR, keep all paper work so I did.

Very sincerely

BOI/PR

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE No. 14-149

Governor Releases National Guard Report, Adjutant General Out
Calls for Special Team to Restore Respect and Responsibility

September 4, 2014, Anchorage, Alaska – Following the conclusion of a six-month independent review and assessment of open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard, Governor Sean Parnell released the findings today, and took the resignation of the adjutant general, Major General Thomas H. Katkus. The governor originally requested the assessment from the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in February.

The report found Guard members have a lack of trust and confidence in the Alaska National Guard leadership's ability to handle sexual assault cases and other misconduct. Further, the report found that favoritism, ethical misconduct and fear of reprisal have eroded trust and confidence in Guard leadership.

"The dedicated men and women who serve in the Alaska National Guard deserve better and I am committed to restoring the trust they are entitled to," Governor Parnell said. "While the report's findings are deeply troubling, I know that the overwhelming majority of Alaska National Guard personnel serve admirably and honorably. We will take all necessary steps to ensure respect, responsibility and trust are restored."

Governor Parnell requested and received the resignation of Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general, and commissioner of Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. Brigadier General Mike Bridges will serve as acting commissioner on an interim basis until a new adjutant general is named. The governor will also closely examine the command structure within the Alaska National Guard, which will include further staffing changes.

Governor Parnell requested the National Guard Bureau's help in assembling a team to implement the recommendations in the report to restore a healthy and safe working environment for the men and women of the Guard. The governor has requested the OCI provide personnel to assist with implementing the recommendations outlined in the report. The team will include a representative from the Office of the Governor.

The governor has requested a further investigation into allegations of fraud pertaining to the misuse of Guard assets.

A copy of the report from the Office of Complex Investigations is available at:
http://gov.alaska.gov/parnell_media/ak-roa-combined.pdf

Reporters who have follow up questions for the Guard Bureau may contact Rick Breitenfeldt at (703) 601 6767 or (703) 627 7273.

I have an inkling of what you're trying to cover up here, and it starts with a woman named [BOI/PR].

Do you know who she was ?

She came to Ken Blaylock seeking protection from one of her fellow Guard members, and two days later she was found dead

DEAD Ms Tepas, as in not living anymore.

She [BOI/PR] too.

You should be ashamed of how you handled this situation, so ashamed that I would think that you would resign your position immediately.

The silver lining in all of this is that come November, Sean Parnell and his crew of morally bankrupt cohorts, including yourself, will be sent packing, looking for new jobs.

That is the best that I can hope for at this point, because I know beyond a shadow of a doubt that you will continue to do nothing in the search for truth and justice in the case of [BOI/PR].

Dear Ms Tepas -

I notice that you were once a member of the Alaska State Troopers.

I just wanted to say that your handling of the reports of rape and sexual assault in the Alaska National Guard is, to say the least, disgraceful.

I suggest alerting him via email of the request, so he sees it when he arrives this evening, and let him figure out when he'd like to do the interview. I would imagine he or his assistant can get back with Ch2 - or he can let you know what he prefers. If you all need our help with setting it up, we can do that as well.

Good - look forward to seeing you tomorrow morning.

Also, just wanted to let you know we had a good meeting with Chaplains Koch and McGovern today. Please make sure BG Mott takes some time to meet with these two chaplains. I think they will be helpful to him. I'll fill you in tomorrow a little on the conversation - but it was very positive. They also mentioned they appreciated the Governor's remarks to leadership this last Saturday morning (he met with both Army and Air Guard leadership members) and felt it went a long way to making positive changes in the trust of leadership. Sounds like General Bridges did a great job too.

We're making good progress! :)

Dear Sir or Ma'am,

Our office is in receipt of your email to Governor Sean Parnell. Your message included a reference to partisan campaign activity. Please be advised that Alaska law prohibits the use of State equipment or resources for campaign or partisan political purposes. Therefore, we ask that you not contact this office regarding campaign activity in the future. I am unable to respond to, forward, or discuss inquiries that contain references to partisan political campaigns other than to provide an alternative contact. The Division of Elections' website provides candidate and campaign information, which can be found online by clicking the "Candidate Information" link at http://www.elections.alaska.gov. Inquiries for Governor Parnell's campaign must be directed to info@Parnell2014.com. By law, our office will not and cannot forward your original inquiry to any other staff in our office or to any campaign personnel.

In the future, if we can be of assistance on any State of Alaska matter, please feel free to contact us again by email or at 907-465-3500 and refrain from referring to political campaigns so that we may be able to forward the information or respond substantively to you without violating State law.

Subject: Alaska National Guard Corruption - Post BG Katkus

TO: All Concerned Parties

FROM: Concerned Group of Alaska Army National Guard Members

SUBJECT: Alaska Army National Guard Corruption – Post General Katkus

Earlier this month MG Tom Katkus resigned as the Director of the DMVA and TAG of the Alaska National Guard. However, there are several things that are happening with the AKNG that have been kept from the public. There have been a lot of people posting on social media sites, the Alaska Dispatch News website, and the KTUU website; these people are commenting about what they believe is going on within this organization without any firsthand knowledge. So to dispel these wastes of momentum we will put into detail what is actually happening since the resignation, who is doing what, and why. We feel it is important to release this now because most of the actions of Gov Sean Parnell, Sen Lisa Murkowski, and Sen Mark Begich are politically motivated. They are doing nothing more than grand standing for the media as a champion for women's rights and against sexual assault.

We agree that any woman that has to endure sexual harassment, sexual assault, or any action that would degrade them as a person has no place within the Department of Defense. However, using these victims to further you own agenda without regard to their privacy, their situation, or actual justice is adding to the issues within the Alaska National Guard. This organization has also had cases of sexual assault and harassment by women but none of that information is being put out. Our organization has been making deals with real criminals and felons in exchange for assistance in prosecuting leaders for adultery. Any soldier, officer or enlisted, committing criminal offenses should be punished accordingly.

MG Katkus was asked by Gov Parnell for his resignation and we believe that this was an appropriate response. However, what many people fail to realize is that the resignation of the TAG will not solve anything. It was his duty as the TAG to hold all of his senior leaders responsible for the enforcement of all policies and keep him informed at all times. Asking him to resign is like asking a CEO of a company to resign because someone in the mail room failed to deliver a parcel on time. There are so many people who were between the victims and MG Katkus that have yet to be held accountable. In this message we plan to put some names out that deserve the appropriate attention.

BG Bridges – has been assigned as the senior officer for the Army Guard here in Alaska. Just like MG Katkus, he was responsible for the actions or inaction of the officers below him. To ask for the resignation of one without the other is a failure on Gov Parnell. He has failed at this position but yet has been assigned as the acting TAG until one has been appointed. He had a direct role in concealing sexual harassment cases, sexual assault allegations, and inappropriate conduct by senior staff. He should not have been asked to assume this position but instead to submit his own resignation.

BG Jorgensen – as the Chief of Staff of the Army Guard here in Alaska she has positioned herself as one of the most powerful officers in the state. She has used her position of power and fear to have her friends appointed to positions without being vetted, covered up and concealed fraud, and used her position to create a hostile environment for Soldiers with the Army Guard. She has used her rank as a general grade officer to put senior NCOs and senior Officers under investigation to terminate careers, stop promotions, and illegally promote officers who would support her agenda.

The public has been allowed to read a report from the Office of Complex Investigations. What is not publically known is that the due to the ranks involved they are not authorized to investigate the conduct of a general grade officer. There were several key points in this report that point directly to conduct that needs to be reviewed by the Department of the Army Inspector General. This is the only agency that can review a General's conduct. On 27 August 2014, this was requested by Gov Parnell. This is long overdue and needs to lead to the resignation of every COL and above and numerous Senior NCOs in the ARNG.

The report on numerous occasions talked about the environment of the Alaska National Guard and how the conduct of a few has been allowed to continue. MG Katkus, BG Bridges, and BG Jorgenson have been members of the AKNG for more than 30 years and are at the heart of this conduct. These core isues the OCI pointed out didn't happen overnight. This toxic atmosphere in the Alaska National Guard has been a slow but growing issue for more than a decade.

BG Mott,

Welcome to Alaska. It is hard to imagine how difficult the task will be for you. You are asked to come to Alaska and help identify the issues here, find ways to improve this command, and take appropriate action. The difficulty that you are going to face is that several key staff members under MG Katkus, BG Bridges, and BG Jorgensen will try and shade the truth to fit their own agenda. Many of these people deserve to be removed from their positions, but without asking the right questions to the right people this will not happen. Take the time to read some of the statements and investigations that have already happened. Look past rumor and find the truth. There are a lot of people that are willing to tell the truth if they know that it will lead to the appropriate resolution. For far too long any statement made against the generals would not result in any action.

Governor Sean Parnell,

[original text removed] MG Kaktus is not the only resignation that you need to ask for. He was the head of this organization and his key leaders should be held equally accountable. Over the past 10 years the Army has seen the need to adapt to an ever changing force. Gays and Lesbians have been allowed not to just enlist but can serve openly; recently all MOS' have been opened to everyone to include allowing females to serve as Infantryman and attend the US Army Ranger School. With all of this equality it is hard to see how the treatment of enlisted Soldiers is different than that of officers. A great example of this is MG Katkus. [redacted] BOI/PR [redacted] He is allowed a "gentlemen's exit" with an honorable discharge. Meanwhile, enlisted members are being given severe administrative actions for the same conduct. Our core of leaders needing to be relieved is long overdue. The census from the OCI report shows the mistrust our junior Soldiers and Officers have for our most senior leadership. The time of having Senior Leaders in the Alaska National Guard having a "do as I SAY NOT AS DO MENATLITY " needs to stop immediately. Your office has been given notice of this over the past 18 months and more needs to be done. This organization will grow in positive light if we are given leaders we can grow with.

Respectfully,

AKANG Whistle Blower's

A military investigation has cleared higher ups within the Alaska National Guard of mishandling sexual assault cases. The Army Inspector General's report, completed last month, also found that guard members did not feel concerned about the issue.

A brief summary of tha findings was made public Wadnesday in a one-page letter sent to Sen. Lisa Murkowski by the Department of Defense Inspector General, who had oversight over the investigation because senior officials within the Guard were under scrutiny. The agency finished its review early this month, and this week told Murkowski it concurred with the Army IG's findings.

The letter, signed by Acting Assistant Inspector General for Communications Larry D. Turner, concludes "...The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and othar AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents."

Gen. Thomas Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general and also serves as commissioner of the state Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, is satisfied with the Army findings, according to Maj. Candis Olmstead, public affairs director for the Alaska National Guard.

"Gen. Katkus is glad that the investigation was handled by an outside federal agency which has no agenda but ... to determine truth. He is cautiously guarded because there will always be room for improvement. But he is looking forward to seeing what areas we can improve upon," Olmstead said.

The IG's letter comes close to a year after Murkowski asked the independent agency to look into allegations that dysfunction within the Alaska National Guard's command climate impeded the reporting and investigation of sexual assaults, including attempts by some officials to try cover up incidents. Murkowski called for the investigation after two chaplains from the Alaska National Guard came to her seeking help. The chaplains have for some time tried to get help for victims they believe weren't helped the way they should have been.

Another victim advocate, Lt. Col. Ken Blaylock, who retired in 2012, has voiced similar concerns.

Since leaving the guard, Blaylock, a former National Guard commander and staff officer, has emerged as a tenacious whistleblower with a laundry list of complaints about the command structure. He said this week he was unconvinced by the IG report, which clears that command structure of allegations it mishandled and coverad up sexual assault cases.

"It's interesting that the inspector general did not interview me, since I have documentation which disproves his conclusions. I wonder how many other victims and witnesses he did not interview," said Blaylock.

The report has not yet been made public or released to Murkowksi.

In the letter to Murkowski, the inspector general indicates the report also addresses the climate in which Guard members are operating and whether they had concerns about sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting. "Climate sensing sessions" found no such concerns, according to Turner's letter.

Blaylock has asserted that climate surveys have in the past been used to smoke out anyone who might speak against the command structure. Out of fear of retaliation, people choose not to speak up, he said. Plus, Blaylock said, before the investigative team showed up, the Alaska National Guard held mandatory briefings in which the stories of some sexual assault situations were discredited, and procedures about proper handling of cases reiterated.

Olmstead said climate surveys are always anonymous and the survey-takers are not subject to retribution for their answers. Only if the participant chooses to put his or her name on it would their identity be known, she said. Surveys may help a new commander get a sense for the working climate within the unit, and different command levels may also review the surveys "to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment," she said.

Olmstead also said that while "all call" meetings did take place prior to the IG investigation and surveys, they were not convened for the purposes of skewing the results. All call meetings, which everyone attends, are not uncommon, and during those meetings information about process and procedure is often discussed. At no time were sexual assault stories or situations discredited, she said.

Blaylock has also questioned whether the IG actually had a chance to look at all of the evidence, meet with all of the victims and follow how all of the cases were handled, or if it followed only those cases the National Guard gave it access to.

In its inquiry, the Army IG found that 11 cases of alleged sexual assault were referred to Alaska law enforcement authorities — proper procedure since military code requires investigation and prosecution of cases involving Alaska National Guard suspects. It also found that Katkus took action against two suspects, each time after the sexual assault allegations were substantiated against Guard members. Consequences included being discharged and separated from the Guard.

"We definitely did not just pass on a select group of cases. All of the cases that have been reported have been documented. And all of that information was readily available to the inspector general's team," Olmstead said.

Everything follows policy and procedure, and everything is reported, she said.

She also pointed out that Blaylock, who has not actively been a part of the command for nearly two years, is not is a position to have firsthand information about current cases or the way things have been handled.

Through its public affairs chief, Bridget Ann Serchak, the Department of Defense Inspector General declined to comment on the scope or procedures employed during its investigation. If someone like Blaylock had continued concerns, they were welcome to call the IG's hotline and initiate a whistleblower complaint and through that process could be interviewed, she said.

A Murkowski spokesman said the senator is withholding comment until she has an opportunity to see the full report.

RTQ, Lisa Demer (ADN) 21 May 2014

Good evening, Lisa.

I had all but one of these answers to your questions (below) ready for you yesterday, and sent you an email stating that I was waiting for some additional information. I was fact-checking another document that shares the Alaska National Guard's data on sexual assaults so that I could provide it to you as well (it is attached).

However, I saw that your story ran last night, so I worked on other priorities today. Maybe this information will still be helpful if you do a follow up story about how allegations about our organization could not be substantiated by a Department of Defense inspector general team. In fact, the IG team stated that "The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any sexual assault incidents," and the sexual assault response coordinator "promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities."

If you are interested in doing a story on how our organization helps our members who are sexual assault victims, a service rarely provided in other agencies or organizations, I would be happy to provide you with additional details and put you in touch with our lead SARC.

Once the OCI assessment concludes, you may need more information from the Alaska National Guard. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions. I will do my best to find you answers. Depending on your questions and the people I have to contact for the answers, and their schedules and availability, it is fair to need about two business days to reply in some cases. I will reply as promptly as possible. And if you have a story deadline that I am aware of, I will try to expedite.

Answers to your questions:

1. The command climate survey is used for various purposes, such as when a unit gets a new commander and he or she would like a better understanding of the working climate within the unit, or periodically at different command levels to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment.

The current command climate survey that all members of the Alaska National Guard have been asked to take part in was requested by the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigation, in an effort to assess the overall health and wellness of the Alaska National Guard. The survey seeks members' input regarding the entire Alaska National Guard. The last day for members to complete the survey is June 1.

The survey is completely anonymous and no one can be personally identified in connection with their input.

2. The four phases of the OCI assessment are 1) Intake, 2) Interviews and Review, 3) Assessment and 4) Finalize Report.

Phase 1 Intake
-Command Climate Survey
-Data Collection

Phase 2 Interviews and Review
-OCI Ground Assessment begins
-Interviews with AKNG members, State Prosecutors office and Law Enforcement -Travel to identified/requested installations

Phase 3 Assessment
-OCI team returns to NGB to assess data and draft a preliminary report -OCI returns to Alaska as needed

Phase 4 Finalize Report
-Initial coordination may be made with JFHQ and/or Governor's Office at Governor's discretion -NGB-JA conducts legal review -Out brief provided at Governor's request

3. OCI team left Monday morning.

4. OCI team works for Chief of the National Guard Bureau, and they work in the Pentagon.

Please see the attached, which should provide additional helpful details.

Best Regards,

Candis Olmstead

From January 2009 to May 20, 2014, there were nine sexual assaults reported by victims in the Alaska National Guard whose offender was also a member of the Alaska National Guard. In the same timeframe, there were 26 sexual assaults reported by Alaska National Guard members whose offender was not in the AKNG, but was someone from the community. The bar graph illustrates the number of sexual assaults reported by AKNG victims and compares the number of non-member offenders with the number of AKNG offenders. The numbers and years all reflect when the assault occurred, not necessarily when the report occurred.

Uninformed, inaccurate reporting is painting the wrong picture of the Alaska National Guard

In the past seven months, two news writers have contacted the Alaska National Guard with questions regarding sexual assault in the organization. All additional news reports have recycled inaccurate, misconstrued information. Interviews with Alaska National Guard leadership have resulted in reports that left out key, relevant details.

Media and politicians who lack correct information and have chosen not to pursue accurate, current data have made multiple false and defamatory statements about the Alaska National Guard.

Every commentary printed to date in local media was written without the author contacting the Alaska National Guard for information. The authors did not give us an opportunity to correct inaccuracies or provide facts, but chose to regurgitate information that had already been reported without fact-checking. Others are using this sensitive subject for political posturing, disparaging our organization to advance their political or commentary careers as they generalize and exaggerate reality.

Here are the facts.

1. In the Alaska National Guard, there have been nine reports of sexual assault that have occurred in the past 5 ½ years in which the alleged perpetrator was a member of the organization. (This includes data from January 2009 through May 20, 2014.)

   A. Nine reported assaults in five-and-a-half years averages fewer than two reported assaults per year. In this 4,000-member organization, 1/20th of one percent of our membership has reported a sexual assault.
   B. Of these nine assaults, one occurred on duty at duty location. Three occurred on a military installation off-duty. Five occurred after hours, off-location.
   C. There was one report of a sexual assault committed by a member of the Alaska National Guard in 2013. There have been zero reports in 2014.

2. Nearly three-quarters of the sexual assaults reported since 2009 were committed by perpetrators who were not in the Alaska National Guard. We track these numbers because we want to help victims regardless of who assaulted them, or when the assault happened. Yet these numbers continue to be included in data that media and politicians are citing when they misrepresent our organization and suggest that we have such a high number of assaults in our ranks. They say we have a culture that tolerates this behavior.

How many other organizations have full-time support personnel dedicated to meeting with victims and helping them through the difficulties after being assaulted? We do.

We don't just point them to a counselor. Our sexual assault response coordinators and victim advocates are with victims every step of the way, to the extent that the victim allows.

Our sexual assault response coordinators go with victims to appointments, court dates, sit with them when they are being questioned by law enforcement, check in with them, and notify them of the status of their cases when possible. These services are offered to all victims who report, regardless of when the offense took place or who the perpetrator was.

3. Two chaplains shared with a reporter for an October 2013 print media article that there were victims in the Alaska National Guard who had not received proper, timely response from the organization, and victims were not taken seriously with regard to being sexually assaulted.

After that media coverage, the chaplains shared previously undisclosed details of their cases with our sexual assault response coordinator so that she could cross-reference the names with those victims who had reported to a victim advocate or a sexual assault response coordinator.

Every victim who sought support from our chaplains had either reported their assault and was receiving support from our sexual assault response coordinators; or chose to report only, but not seek further assistance; or chose not to report, while knowing that assistance is available.

All unrestricted reports had been referred to local law enforcement. Of the cases that local law enforcement did not pursue, one met criteria that allowed us to request further review by the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations. We referred that case, and they sent an OCI team to investigate further.

4. The Alaska National Guard does not have criminal justice authority over sexual assaults or other non-military criminal offenses in the way that active duty military services do. Some politicians and partisan commentators have incorrectly suggested that the Alaska National Guard, rather than local law enforcement and the court system, should pursue prosecution of sexual assault. This is not possible, as civilian offenses such as sexual assault may only be prosecuted by civilian criminal justice authorities, per state law.

These uninformed individuals have also asserted that we chose not to be proactive in our response to victim reporting. This is also incorrect, as every unrestricted report has been referred to local law enforcement.

5. The Alaska National Guard pursues administrative action in response to local law enforcement and Office of Complex Investigation results. Some members who have committed acts of sexual assault or sexual harassment have lost rank, been forced out of the organization, lost command, or been administratively reassigned pending the outcome of administrative boards.

In order to ensure due process for the subject and the alleged victim, these actions take time. Due to required confidentiality and respect for privacy, personnel who are not directly involved in the administrative actions are not privy to the status or details of pending actions. This may be the reason for some people's concerns about timeliness or level of response; they are unaware of the status for each case, and therefore make incorrect assumptions that cases are not pursued.

6. There are three sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates throughout the Alaska National Guard. We have individual and class training, sensing sessions (feedback discussions), "all-calls" for leadership to communicate directly with all personnel, in addition to a video message from leadership, announcements, advertisements, articles, posters, brochures, presentation tables, and social media posts. All of this to ensure in every way possihle that we have resources in place to help victims.

Communications are consistent and often so the message will be clearly understood that sexual assault is not tolerated. We do many things to ensure our members know our stance on sexual assault, including encouraging them to come forward for support in the event that they have been assaulted.

7. Of the nine assaults that allegedly occurred since 2009 by a member of the Alaska National Guard,

A. Five were off-base, off-duty.
B. Four were rapes.
C. Five were inappropriate touching with clothes on.
D. Seven were referred to law enforcement (the other two were restricted reports—a decision made by the victim—which therefore could not be prosecuted or otherwise further pursued while in such status.)
E. None have been prosecuted.

8. Administrative investigations in the National Guard are now conducted by the Office of Complex Investigations but this program has only been funded since 2012. Prior to this, local units did not have the resources or guidance to fully and properly respond to reports of sexual assaults and were limited to "15-6" Investigations (in the Army National Guard) or "Commander Directed Investigations" (in the Air National Guard).

One assault is too many. But in an organization that draws members from a community of citizens who live in the state with the highest rate of sexual assaults in the nation, 1/20th of one percent is not the epidemic proportion being portrayed by some journalists and politicians.

We are very proud of the many distinguished Soldiers and Airmen in the Alaska National Guard who proudly serve our state and nation. We will continue to educate them, protect them and pursue justice within the means we have.

We hope that others who care about the people in our organization will focus on the real needs and concerns we must address, and hold their fire, even though they are being misinformed by cynical political agendas.

Governor Sean Parnell has been responding to allegations that sexual assault crimes within the state's National Guard were reported to him four years before he requested a federal investigation. The Governor says as soon as he had specific information, he acted. Parnell's commissioner of the Department of Military and Veteran's Affairs, Major General Thomas Katkus says the federal investigation should help improve the system.

Major General Thomas Katkus

Major General Thomas Katkus, how large do you think the sexual assault issue is within Alaska?

The numbers I've got show us below what it would be in Alaska, we have a different number, total number of cases, because we track victims, don't track it as if we've got that many suspects. We've got 37 cases; of those 37 cases we have only 11 reported sexual assaults are Guard members as perpetrators. My position is even one is too many and it's a problem – a large problem; 37 cases over the past 5 years.

How does Alaska compare to military nationally for sexual assault?

With Alaska being the highest sexual assault in the nation, dark climate, small houses, alcohol, there is a lot of propensity toward that kind of activity, which is unfortunate but also very rampant in cold, dark climates. I think the problem is getting better results with the resources being put toward it. The Guard is community based so we have a lot of resources beyond DOD. We have a lot of members in the National Guard that are counselors or lawyers so we have resources. The issue is out there fairly evenly across all services but we're better equipped to offer services.

Does the legal structure of the Guard make it more cumbersome, more difficult to track cases and get information, Anchorage Police Department handling cases? Helpful or more difficult?

Difficult to address. We as a National Guard, we don't have an independent criminal justice system. We're not like active duty that has its own Uniform Code of Military Justice to address specifically infractions within the National Guard, because we have members that are also traditional, that go home at night and are under the laws of their communities. The authorities that cover our members are really the local authorities, the state troopers or other law enforcement. It's not our purview to supplement that. We take our own disciplinary actions through normal business practices, rules and regulation enforcement and then we have discipline. But we don't incarcerate individuals. We don't have a requirement; that our preponderance of evidence is what we go off of, 50% is civil action as opposed to beyond a reasonable doubt in any type of criminal investigation.

Governor Parnell said he acted to call for a national investigation as soon as he had specifics. What kind of specific information is needed to prompt an investigation?

For the National Guard Bureau that the Governor asked, it's just the request of the Governor. The Governor, anytime he has a desire to have an independent assessment or look into an organization he's responsible with, which would be the Air Guard or the Army Guard, he can contact the National Guard Bureau, advise them of the problem and they would propose the best solutions to step forward to look into it. Because it could be a safety issue, it could be an area of concern on finance, so either the safety investigators would come out or an auditor. Or in this case to look at a problem with how the reporting system is or an assessment of how overall, we are addressing sexual assaults or sexual harassment in the National Guard. So, in this case, again, he puts the problem statement forward and they provide the resource that best answers that.

Why wouldn't chaplains risking their positions to bring the concerns forward to the Governor be enough to prompt an investigation by the DOD?

I don't know that I have an answer for that. The Chaplains shouldn't be at risk for bringing any of these issues forward. There's no risk to them to, matter of fact it's incumbent on them to bring those issues forward. Their job description is pretty much, they advise the command....trying to make sure I get this right so that this is fairly accurate. The significant responsibility that they're held to is to advise the commander of issues of ethics, morals and morale within an organization. So they're almost held on a no harm, no fowl. They're required to bring the bad news forward if they've got the bad news.

Well it seems there was some confusion or hesitancy in that regard. Your deputy commissioner asked the chaplains to sign a document saying they wouldn't speak on behalf of the Guard, when actually what they were doing was bringing victims concerns forward. Did you ask him to do those things or was that something he felt he needed to do as deputy commissioner?

I believe the letter you're referring to is a letter that went out to all of our members as we approached the political season. It was advising everyone to be very judicious and cautious on how they answer anyone that is approaching them and asking them for an official position of the department. So in that sense that was just to reiterate to clear it with a supervisor and we're not prohibiting anybody from talking to the press, their chain of command or other people. Just that they try to clear that, get the best information possible and if they're speaking for the department, make sure they clear it through our public affairs office in order to make sure we have the best, most accurate information out there.

Do you think there needs to be changes in reporting and how people can bring these concerns forward to help boost confidence for people who are taking on the very difficult thing to have to come forward and talk about trauma and painful episodes they may have experienced?

Absolutely, especially with as many deployments as we have because it's not only in the area of sexual assault, it's any type of experience that they are not normally exposed to in civilian activity. So there are traumatic events in everyone's life. We follow DOD policy and its changing constantly. I think in the last five years the department of defense has definitely stepped up its game. It's provided additional resources and of the limited training dollars, a significant amount of that resource is directed to bystander training, self help awareness to educate people about reporting any type of sexual assault or activity related to it. Then the resourcing for the investigation of those has increased and we've worked on training our investigators to investigate the civilian equivalent complaints of sexual harassment. WE have additional resources that would look into any allegations of sexual assault, after the law enforcement have also been engaged on that same topic. And then the victim advocacy program we have. Multiple victim advocates have been assigned to the Guard as of late. Currently have three sexual assault coordinators assigned and 42 victim advocates assigned to the National Guard. So your question was, do I see better ways to do it? We can always improve but it is an incredible change over the past five years to where we are now.

Major General, how damaging is this for morale?

You know, it's damaging for morale, but where I'm very, very concerned, is we've made great strides in making people aware, we have a process in place, it's very transparent and they can feel comfortable reporting and they're going to get the help. With all of the adverse press and the senior officials who have basically expressed their concern and trust, I would hope that would not translate to the other end of the food chain to the young members who may be victimized and may now decide not to come forward because of lack of trust in the system. The DOD has spent five years trying to put in place a system that works and I'm very afraid that this might be undermined by the lack of confidence that may be generated by this perception that is out there.

Are you confident that when this investigation is over, that the system will show there are no major problems with how the guard is handling reporting and the cases that come forward?

I'm confident that the assessment will come in with a better way of doing it. This is the first time we've really stepped back and evaluated from top to bottom, the entire process. I would hope they would come in and advise us of better ways to do business. So we look forward to what we will get as feedback. My feeling is we have a good system in place right now, it's a workable system that follows all of DOD's processes and regulations and I'm thinking an outside look will provide that much more suggestions that we can incorporate and make this better.

My last question would be, you just mentioned Guard members and a perception of what's happening. What would be your concern about perception? We know there are high rates of assault, what perception are you concerned about?

Well, the perception I'm concerned about is that, in the past five years, 70% of reported assaults, the perpetrator was a member of our community, not the National Guard. So 11 assaults in five years, those members were Guard members who committed those acts, so out of 37 cases, only 11 have we had to discipline one of our own members over. The rest, the other 26 cases, are all cases were we have provided exceptional support for the victim. Those victim advocates have engaged. We've taken the victims to local law enforcement, supported them through all of the issues and tried to make sure we could be there for them. That's what's not getting reported here is DOD as an organization has provided incredible response in taking care of the soldiers and airmen that are assigned in the National Guard and that's where I'm really afraid the perception is being missed here.

Is the Guard looking at, the people who have been victimized. Are there efforts underway to track back and look at where are people getting into positions where they're at risk. Is there research into that so you can help young men and young women avoid some of those pitfalls?

There's always different types of training we have people exposed to and mandate and some of the best is bystander training where not only do you train people to look out for themselves and not put themselves into harm's way but also train soldiers to look out for other people that may be inadvertently putting themselves in harm's way. So they teach them how to carefully approach a situation and defuse it. Sometimes a third party, that extra set of eyes that the potential victim may not be able to see. So your answer is yes, we're training people to be safer and we're training them to look out for each other and realistically that's how you start solving all of these problems is everyone becomes aware of looking out for each other.

Major General Thomas Katkus Responds To National Guard Sexual Assault Allegations

By Lori Townsend, APRN - Anchorage | May 1, 2014 - 6:04 pm

listen to audio: http://www.alaskapublic.org/2014/05/01/major-general-thomas-katkus-responds-to-national-guard-sexual-assault-allegations/

My position is even one is too many and it's a problem – a large problem; 37 cases over the past 5 years.

How does Alaska compare to military nationally for sexual assault?

With Alaska being the highest sexual assault in the nation, dark climate, small houses, alcohol, there is a lot of propensity toward that kind of activity, which is unfortunate but also very rampant in cold, dark climates. I think the problem is getting better results with the resources being put toward it. The Guard is community based so we have a lot of resources beyond DOD. We have a lot of members in the National Guard that are counselors or lawyers so we have resources. The issue is out there fairly evenly across all services but we're better equipped to offer services.

Does the legal structure of the Guard make it more cumbersome, more difficult to track cases and get information, Anchorage Police Department handling cases? Helpful or more difficult?

Difficult to address. We as a National Guard, we don't have an independent criminal justice system. We're not like active duty that has its own Uniform Code of Military Justice to address specifically infractions within the National Guard, because we have members that are also traditional, that go home at night and are under the laws of their communities. The authorities that cover our members are really the local authorities, the state troopers or other law enforcement. It's not our purview to supplement that. We take our own disciplinary actions through normal business practices, rules and regulation enforcement and then we have discipline.

But we don't incarcerate individuals. We don't have a requirement; that our preponderance of evidence is what we go off of, 51% is civil action as opposed to beyond a reasonable doubt in any type of criminal investigation.

Governor Parnell said he acted to call for a national investigation as soon as he had specifics. What kind of specific information is needed to prompt an investigation?

For the National Guard Bureau that the Governor asked, it's just the request of the Governor. The Govemor, anytime he has a desire to have an independent assessment or look into an organization he's responsible with, which would be the Air Guard or the Army Guard, he can contact the National Guard Bureau, advise them of the problem and they would propose the best solutions to step forward to look into it. Because it could be a safety issue, it could be an area of concern on finance, so either the safety investigators would come out or an auditor. Or in this case to look at a problem with how the reporting system is or an assessment of how overall, we are addressing sexual assaults or sexual harassment in the National Guard. So, in this case, again, he puts the problem statement forward and they provide the resource that best answers that.

Why wouldn't chaplains risking their positions to hring the concerns forward to the Governor be enough to prompt an investigation by the DOD?

I don't know that I have an answer for that. The Chaplains shouldn't be at risk for bringing any of these issues forward. There's no risk to them to, matter of fact it's incumbent on them to bring those issues forward. Their job description is pretty much, they advise the command....trying to make sure I get this right so that this is fairly accurate. The significant responsibility that they're held to is to advise the commander of issues of ethics, morals and morale within an organization. So they're almost held on a no harm, no foul. They're required to bring the bad news forward if they've got the bad news.

Well it seems there was some confusion or hesitancy in that regard. Your deputy commissioner asked the chaplains to sign a document saying they wouldn't speak on hchalf of the Guard, when actually what they were doing was hringing victims concerns forward. Did you ask him to do those things or was that something he felt he needed to do as deputy commissioner?

I believe the letter you're referring to is a letter that went out to all of our members as we approached the political season. It was advising everyone to be very judicious and cautious on how they answer anyone that is approaching them and asking them for an official position of the department. So in that sense that was just to reiterate to clear it with a supervisor and we're not prohibiting anybody from talking to the press, their chain of command or other people. Just that they try to clear that, get the best information possible and if they're speaking for the department, make sure they clear it through our public affairs office in order to make sure we have the best, most accurate information out there.

Do you think there needs to be changes in reporting and how people can hring these concerns forward to help boost confidence for people who are taking on the very difficult thing to bave to come forward and talk about trauma and painful episodes they may have experienced?

Absolutely, especially with as many deployments as we have because it's not only in the area of sexual assault, it's any type of experience that they are not normally exposed to in civilian activity. So tbere are traumatic events in everyone's life. We follow DOD policy and its changing constantly. I think in the last five years the department of defense has definitely steppcd up its game. It's provided additional resources and of the limited training dollars, a significant amount of that resource is directed to bystander training, self help awareness to educate people about reporting any type of sexual assault or activity related to it. Then the resourcing for the investigation of those has increased and we've worked on training our investigators to investigate the civilian equivalent complaints of sexual harassment. WE have additional resources that would look into any allegations of sexual assault, after the law enforcement have also been engaged on that same topic. And then the victim advocacy program we have. Multiple victim advocates have been assigned to the Guard as of late. Currently bave three sexual assault coordinators assigned and 42 victim advocates assigned to the National Guard. So your question was, do I see better ways to do it? We can always improve but it is an incredible change over the past five years to where we are now.

Major General, how damaging is this for morale?

You know, it's damaging for morale, but where I'm very, very concerned, is we've made great strides in making people aware, we have a process in place, it's very transparent and they can feel comfortable reporting and they're going to get the help. With all of the adverse press and the senior officials who have basically expressed their concern and trust, I would hope that would not translate to the other end of the food chain to the young members who may be victimized and may now decide not to come forward because of lack of trust in the system. The DOD has spent five years trying to put in place a system that works and I'm very afraid that this might be undermined by the lack of confidence that may be generated by this perception that is out there.

Are you confident that when this investigation is over, that the system will show there are no major problems with how the guard is handling reporting and the cases that come forward?

I'm confident that the assessment will come in with a better way of doing it. This is the first time we've really stepped back and evaluated from top to bottom, the entire process. I would hope they would come in and advise us of better ways to do business. So we look forward to what we will get as feedhack. My feeling is we have a good system in place right now, it's a workable system that follows all of DOD's processes and regulations and I'm thinking an outside look will provide that much more suggestions that we can incorporate and make this better.

My last question would be, you just mentioned Guard members and a perception of what's happening. What would be your concern about perception? We know there are high rates of assault, what perception are you concerned about?

Well, the perception I'm concerned about is that, in the past five years, 70% of reported assaults, the perpetrator was a member of our community, not the National Guard. So 11 assaults in five years, those members were Guard members who committed those acts, so out of 37 cases, only 11 have we had to discipline one of our own members over. The rest, the other 26 cases, are all cases were we have provided exceptional support for the victim. Those victim advocates bave engaged. We've taken tbe victims to local law enforcement, supported them through all of the issues and tried to make sure we could be there for them. That's what's not getting reported here is DOD as an organization has provided incredible response in taking care of the soldiers and airmen that are assigned in the National Guard and that's where I'm really afraid the perception is being missed here.

Is the Guard looking at, the people who have heen victimized. Are there efforts underway to track hack and look at where are people getting into positions where they're at risk. Is there research into that so you can help young men and young women avoid some of those pitfalls?

There's always different types of training we have people exposed to and mandate and some of the best is bystander training where not only do you train people to look out for themselves and not put themselves into harm's way but also train soldiers to look out for other people that may be inadvertently putting themselves in harm's way. So they teach them how to carefully approach a situation and defuse it. Sometimes a third party, that extra set of eyes that the potential victim may not be able to see. So your answer is yes, we're training people to be safer and we're training them to look out for each other and realistically that's how you start solving all of these problems is everyone becomes aware of looking out for eacb other.

Parnell defends timing of National Guard inquiry

Posted: April 30, 2014 - 12:07am

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE — Gov. Sean Parnell's call for a federal investigation of sexual misconduct within the Alaska National Guard came nearly four years after allegations first arose, but he said Monday that he could not act before getting specific details of allegations.

Parnell on Sunday was criticized in a newspaper column for the timing of his call for an investigation and responded to reporters' questions following a candidate debate in Anchorage, the Anchorage Daily News reported.

Early in his tenure, Parnell said halting assaults on women would be a focus of his administration.

Parnell said he met with National Guard chaplains in 2010 regarding the lack of the service's response to reports of sexual assault. However, he did not learn specifics until this year, he said.

"When the chaplains came to me in 2010, I listened to them, had a lengthy meeting with them, heard their concerns specifically on sexual assault, sexual misconduct, those charges that they were saying was occurring in the Guard," Parnell said. "They could only give me general allegations."

The chaplains were "under a duty of confidentiality," Parnell said.

Parnell spoke to the National Guard commander, Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, and learned some of the cases were years old and that allegations of criminal acts had been referred to police or Alaska State Troopers.

Parnell worked with Katkus to make sure a safe reporting mechanism was in place for sexual assault complaints, he said.

Parnell said he met with state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, on Feb. 26, and was given the name of a person in the National Guard who could give specific details on how the system was not working for victims. Parnell said he called the guard member within 24 hours and was told of two instances where the system had not worked.

"Within 24 hours of learning those specific details, I was writing a letter to the Guard Bureau, contacting them, saying please send a special investigator to review all of the cases that the guard has whether they are related to sexual misconduct, whether they are related to fraud," Parnell said. "Got right on it as soon as I had those specific details."

The letter asked for a federal investigation of sexual assault and fraud in the Alaska National Guard and an examination of how commanders handled reports of rape. Parnell announced the federal review in March.

The bureau's Office of Complex Investigations could complete a report by with recommendations by late summer or early fall, Parnell said.

"You can be sure if anything untoward is there or anything that raises concern relative to sexual assault victims or reporting or the command structure, that I will take action," Parnell said.

Gov. Parnell Says He Took Immediate Action On Sexual Assault Allegations

Governor Sean Parnell is defending his decision to wait four years to request a federal investigation into reports of a sexual assault problem in the Alaska National Guard. Anchorage Daily News columnist Shannyn Moore wrote Sunday that Parnell first learned about misconduct in the Guard in 2010, when he was approached by three guard chaplains. Parnell says he took those charges seriously, but lacked the details to prompt an investigation until February.

He says after the initial concerns were raised, he went to Major General Thomas Katkus to make sure the systems were in place to protect guard members. Then in February, Parnell says he was able to talk with a guard member who provided specifics.

Based on what you've heard from victims and others, how big of a problem do you tbink sexual assault is in the National Guard?

I think one allegation is too much and I take every allegation seriously, because I am concerned about Alaskans who suffer from sexual assault and violence. It's been a core part of who I am fighting for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. So, I take every assault allegation seriously. So, in 2010 when the chaplains first came to speak with me and they made allegations that sexual assault was occurring on Guard members I questioned them and asked for detail, and they could not provide it because they were under duty of confidentiality to the people they counseled, but immediately after that I took action and went right to the Guard, to the general, and asked him to talk to me about what he knew of sexual assaults occurring in the Guard. And he went through the cases that had been filed at that time; spoke about how any cases that involved allegations of criminal activity, as in sexual assault, are not only investigated but they are also referred to local law enforcement – like the Anchorage Police Department. And I made sure that for the safety of the victims and any future victims in the Guard that there was, and is, a reporting process that's safe for anybody in the Guard to utilize; that there's an investigation process that is complete and accurate and directed that appropriate penalties be assessed. Now, that's outside the criminal context, but the criminal context goes directly to law enforcement. I had only those general allegations of sexual assault, but I still took action to make sure that there was a system in place that works for victims of sexual assault.

Those general allegations persisted but they were the same allegations about events that occurred years ago. And then on Feb. 26th, Senator Dyson, came to me and said he had specific detail. Before when he spoke to me he had general allegations and he asked me to call a guard member who would provide me with specific detail about how the system wasn't working. I made that contact within 24 hours of Sen. Dyson's [call], personally spoke with a Guard member. That Guard member provided me with two instances where, if the allegations were substantiated, that the system would have failed our Guard member. And at that point, I realized I needed to get an independent assessment of the entire reporting and investigation structure. So I called in the National Guard Bureau, they have a complex investigation review team – I did that within 24 hours and that team is on the ground now in Alaska, doing their work to make sure that victims are safe.

Some people will think why was it four years? In hindsight do you wish you would have come forward four years ago, what do you think could have been done differently?

At the time I took immediate action to make sure that every victim of a sexual assault had been referred to law enforcement. I made sure that anyone who had concerns about what was happening in the Guard had a safe reporting structure, but without specific detail about how the system was otherwise failing, that's all I could do, is what I believed. And still believe that. But, on the other hand, once I got specific information about how the structure was actually failing, in other words the who, what, where, when why – the same thing you reporters ask – even though I pressed for that earlier and nobody could or would provide me with that, the second I got that kind of information I took immediate action with the National Guard Bureau to get them in there and get an independent look at what was happening.

Talk more about the specifics? What exactly were you needing for you to have that ability to actually ask for an investigation?

So, 4 years ago I was told there is a problem with sexual assault in the Guard. That is the sum and substance of what I was given. When I went to Guard leadership to inquire about that they said that yes they had specific instances where sexual assaults had been reported, that those had been referred to law enforcement for investigation, like the Anchorage Police Department. And they also detailed the reporting structure for any kind of alleged malfeasance in the Guard that was in place. And I had detailed for me, here's the list of cases that are pending; here's the list of cases that have been resolved in the past. But when it came specifically to the sexual assaults, when that kind of criminal activity was brought forward, that went immediately, as I was told, to law enforcement, which I think is appropriate.

One of the problems with sexual assault cases is there often isn't enough information and it's very difficult for victims to come forward. Did you consider that when you decided not to pursue an investigation earlier? What would you say to a victim of sexual assault about the statement that you didn't have enough specifics? Do you think that's enough of an answer for someone?

What I did is an internal state investigation. Meaning, I went in, my office went in and we made leadership tell us exactly what they were doing to protect sexual assault victims.

When I had an actual specific set of facts related to how the system had failed, or – in this case – was alleged to fail, I asked the National Guard Bureau, as an independent assessing body, to come in and look at what I had been told and also look at the entire system to make sure we protect our guard members.

The Choose Respect campaign has been a big focus for you. Are you concerned this will damage the momentum or image you're hoping to get across to Alaskans about coming forward when these things happen?

Well, absolutely. Anyone who knows me would say I care deeply about victims of sexual assault and domestic violence. And I'm more concerned than anything that victims may not come forward. Because I know from speaking with many across the state how difficult that already is, and I don't want to make that more difficult. That's why I launched the immediate investigation, even when I had the barest of details, and now that I have specific details, I've called in the National Guard Bureau to help because I think it's beyond us at this point.

When do you expect the investigation to conclude, when will you have a report and will you commit to releasing that report publicly?

I already have. I have made that commitment. The review team from the National Guard Bureau let me know they would be on the ground, in Alaska in the month of May. They said that it would take several months after that to complete the report and make that available to me. I already committed to making that report public, with the exception of any confidential victim information that should not be put forward, because I do want to protect the privacy of the victims. So, that's been my commitment and remains so.

You're still standing behind General Katkus. Do you have confidence in him? Do you wish he would have come to you sooner?

General Katkus has been very forthright. When I started asking questions about sexual assault cases, he came forward right away, showed me the cases that had been transferred to law enforcement, showed me how they have tracked cases, detailed how they investigate cases. And he's been very proactive about holding what the Guard calls "sensing sessions," meaning going into guard units and informing people about how to report acts of sexual harassment, acts of sexual violence. So General Katkus has been very proactive in that regard, and that's what I know at this point.

Do you think he could have done more within the Guard itself to make sure this behavior was not at all tolerated?

From what I know now, the answer is no. But again, I've asked the National Guard Bureau to come have that independent look to make sure our Guard members are safe. General Katkus has told me at every turn that's his desire and mission, he understands it, gets it and he has the systems in place that demonstrate that. I have asked the National Guard Bureau to make sure that those systems truly work for victims because we care deeply, and I care deeply, about protecting Alaskans.

Did you talk to anyone beyond General Katkus about the chaplains' concerns?

Yes, in fact, our office talked with numerous Guard members. All of which had the same general allegations. There was one victim who came forward and spoke with a member of my office. Her case was also being investigated by Anchorage Policed Department at that point in time, so the answer is yes, we spoke with a number of people.

Mike Nizich-yYour chief of staff- was using his personal e-mail account to correspond about this issuc. Wby was that?

I spoke with Mr. Nizich and understand that was at the request of the chaplains who wanted to go outside the official channels. However, I've asked Mr. Nizich to check his personal e-mail for that and his recollection is that it's one email. I've asked him to check for that and move it to the state account, which is protocol to follow. And that will be a part of the public record at that point.

McHugh Pierre was asking questions. Who asked him to bave the chaplains sign confidcntiality statements?

I don't know that but I do have a copy of what he apparently asked to be signed. It's a statement that was emailed to all Department of Military and Veterans Affairs employees. It says employees aren't authorized to give statements on behalf of department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, which is standard operating policy in any department or any business that you don't speak for the business, you don't speak for the department. without first coordinating it with your supervisor.

He also spoke with people on base about wanting to know how information was getting out. It almost feels a bit like a witch hunt. Does that concern you that oftentimes it takes people acting outside of the normal channels to get this information out and at the end of the day, that's the main mission, is it not?

Well that's true and that's why I asked these questions. Again, there's nothing that stops the employee, as long as they're not speaking on behalf of the department. In other words they're speaking as a person, as an Alaskan who's concerned, that's not what this statement addresses though.

But the chaplains weren't' saying they were speaking for the department, they were raising concerns about people who were alleging sexual assault.

And I don't condone the activity you just described. I do, on the other hand, understand when supervisors are asking their employees not to represent the department in certain things. In this case, I don't have all the facts, but I don't condone trying to stop what you're describing.

So you're saying you wouldn't condone McHugh Pierre asking them to he quiet?

No. But again, I don't have evidence is that's what he did. What I evidence is that he asked them not to speak on behalf of the department without coordinating that with a supervisor.

What have you taken away from this process? Do you think there are changes that need to be made? Are you frustrated by tbe process are tbere things that need to be done differently?

I am frustrated when Alaskans in the Guard don't feel like they are protected; that's entirely frustrating. And it's frustrating to me when I don't have enough information to take action beyond what I did. In other words, I took action, I made sure that the systems were in place to protect Guard members; and that the people were in place, like an independent investigator – a safe route for people to report, but until the end of February, until then I didn't have verified facts that alerted me I needed to bring the National Guard Bureau in. So, I do get frustrated when Alaskans are reporting harm and are continuing to report harm, even though, from all appearances, the system is in place and the checks and balances are in place to assure their safety -- including referrals to law enforcement agencies. So if indeed we find there is wrongdoing, I 'll take steps to punish that and make it right, there's no question about that.

Sexual Assault Response
Alaska National Guard
Key Messages and Talking Points

Media Interview
Lori Townsend
APRN

Pursuing Justice. We do not have an independent criminal justice system in the National Guard and we are not subject to the provisions of the federal uniformed code of military justice (UCMJ). We report crimes to local civilian law enforcement.

We have opportunities to respond to allegations administratively through personnel actions that may affect the future career of a perpetrator, but there are lengthy processes as we follow regulations for due process. We do all that we can to ensure victims are protected and perpetrators see consequences to their actions.

Victim Reporting. Victims decide if they want to report their assault to a sexual assault response coordinator or a victim advocate. We have 3 sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates in the Alaska National Guard.

Victim Assistance. They provide assistance to victims. In 70% of reported assaults in the last 5 years, the perpetrator was a civilian member of the community, not a National Guard member. We want to help members of our organization who have been harmed, and we offer assistance and resources that a large majority of civilian organizations do not offer to their employees in-house.

Our Rates vs. Alaska's Rates. There have been 11 reported sexual assaults with National Guard members as the perpetrator in the past 5 years. We have 4,000 people in our organization and an average of 2 assaults by National Guard members per year over a five-year timeframe. One assault is one too many. But our organization has a much smaller percentage of reported assaults than the percentages reported by Alaska citizens as a whole, where we are challenged with one of the highest sexual assault rates in the nation.

RECAP: Summary of Numbers for Reported Cases. There have been 37 reported cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009. In 26 of those cases, the alleged perpetrator was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard. We have 11 reports in the past 5 years where the alleged perpetrator was a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Reports.

Year: Total Number of Reported Cases (Restricted and Unrestricted)

2014: 1 (Unrestricted, 1 not in the AKNG)

2013: 11 (8 were unrestricted; 5 not in the AKNG)

2012: 3 (2 unrestricted; all 3 not in AKNG)

2011: 12 (10 unrestricted; 11 not in the AKNG)

2010: 6 (5 unrestricted; all 5 not in the AKNG)

2009: 4 (2 unrestricted; 1 not in the AKNG)

All unrestricted cases were referred to law enforcement.

Chaplains assertions. All of the victims who sought support from our chaplains also reported their assaults and have received or declined assistance from our sexual assault response program.

Law enforcement. None of the unrestricted cases that were referred to local law enforcement have been prosecuted to date. You may contact law enforcement directly if you have questions about referred cases.

Parnell responds to his handling of allegations of sexual abuse in the Guard

After a candidate forum on Monday, Gov. Sean Parnell answered questions about his administration's handling of allegations of sexual abuse in Alaska's National Guard, something that appears to have plagued the Guard for years. The problems in the Guard were reported in the media last October, and were revisited in a Sunday column by Shannyn Moore. More is likely to be revealed about the issue. For now, however, below are the allegations that I questioned Parnell about, followed by his response.

- Allegation: Parnell waited for four years to act on allegations of a widespread culture of abuse in the Guard. In 2010, three chaplains had a meeting with Parnell to discuss the culture. Republican Sen. Fred Dyson called on Parnell three times to take action. However, it wasn't until March 2014 that Parnell called on the federal government to conduct an official investigation into the allegations.
- Response: Parnell said that the allegations lacked the specificity that he needed to take action. He said he met with now Adjutant General Thomas Katkus about the issue. He said he reviewed charts and spreadsheets that documented the allegations, and saw that the appropriate ones had been referred to the Anchorage Police Department and the troopers. On February 26, Republican Sen. Fred Dyson brought forth a "specific person who was able to make specific claims about what went wrong," Parnell said. Parnell himself talked to this person, and within 24 hours, called on the feds. That investigation is expected to be complete in May. A report will follow likely sometime late summer.

- Allegation: Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, tried to get a sexual assault investigator to stay quiet and not talk to legislators about the issues in the Guard by having her sign a letter saying she wouldn't do so. He then tried to get the Guard chaplains to sign the same letter.
- Response: Parnell said that he was "surprised' by the accusation. But when he looked into it, it was "less nefarious than what had been reported," he said. Indeed, the letter in question, which you can read here, is one that went to other department employees. It says that employees should not give official statements without prior authorizations, and that although, according to the letter, "the mandate does not mean that an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation," such contact had to take place during personal time using personal resources.

Finally, Moore reported that Mike Nizich, Parnell's chief of staff, was using his personal email to correspond with the chaplains about the issues in the Guard. Personal emails are not subject to public information requests. Parnell said that if those emails were about state business, they should be forwarded to Nizich's state account and will direct him to do so.

On Feb. 28, 2014, our governor, Sean Parnell, wrote a letter asking the Department of Defense to investigate "reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

He explained that he was compelled to request the investigation by "information I recently learned."

That was not true. In fact, it was very far from the truth.

Military officers had risked their careers to tell the governor personally that female soldiers had been sexually assaulted by other Guard members and that those assaults were not only not investigated, they were covered up by senior officers.

And when did the governor really learn about this misconduct?

In 2010, four years before he finally decided somebody needed to do something about the pirate ship that was his National Guard.

Here's some of what happened, taken from the accounts of people directly involved:

In 2010, several of the victims of sexual assault and misconduct were distraught and frustrated by the Guard leadership's unwillingness to investigate their complaints and protect them from retribution by victimizers. Eventually, in desperation, they took their stories to their military chaplains. Three chaplains, convinced that they could not trust senior officers of the Guard to respond appropriately, selflessly decided to take their concerns over the heads of those officers directly to the governor.

The chaplains were able to connect with the governor because, in addition to his military duties, one of them had also worked in administration for the Grace Christian Church school, which Parnell's daughters had attended. Using that connection, he was able to arrange a phone appointment with Parnell.

On Nov. 18, 2010, the chaplains -- a major and two lieutenant colonels -- gathered in a church office for their telephone conference with the governor. The chaplains, all feeling personally uncomfortable and professionally at risk for going outside the chain of command, told Parnell, their commander in chief, what they thought he needed to know about the widespread lack of trust in senior Guard leadership, the mishandling of sexual assault complaints and the misuse of Guard funds and resources. The call lasted 20 minutes.

Parnell thanked them for their courage.

Less than two weeks later, on Nov. 30, 2010, several Air National Guardsmen sent a complaint to the governor asking him to "accept the resignation of Major Gen. Thomas Katkus because of 'multiple acts of moral turpitude' he had allowed to run rampant, including drug trafficking, sexual assaults/rape, illegal use of aircraft."

Katkus, who has since been promoted by Parnell to adjutant general of the Alaska Guard, is a member of the governor's Cabinet.

Col. Robert Doehl, a former vice commander of the Alaska Air National Guard's 176th wing, now works for Sen. Mark Begich, D-Alaska, as a special assistant for military and veterans' affairs.

On Dec. 3, 2010, Doehl wrote a seven-page letter to the governor. He thanked Parnell for a meeting they'd had that same day.

Doehl went on to repeat and document allegations about the Guard that he had shared with Parnell in their meeting. The allegations included abuse of authority, safety shortcuts that had resulted in loss of life and aircraft, cover-ups, cronyism and retaliation against whistleblowers. He named names, specifically accusing Lt. Gen. Craig Campbell (he became lieutenant governor in August 2009) and then-Maj. Gen. Katkus of failing to stop the misconduct.

That meeting also included the chaplains, the major and the lieutenant colonels, along with several other officers. By that time, several female soldier rape victims had submitted written statements to the Governor's Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Katie Tepas, according to one of the chaplains. Your office already has those statements, the officers told Parnell. Tepas had also met with some of the victims, who told her their stories in person, according to two officers who heard it from the victims directly.

Karl Hansen, a former special agent with the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division and a former member of security details for Defense Secretaries Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates, is now the medical ombudsman at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. In that role, he has dealt extensively with the Guard sexual assault victims. Hansen said one of the victims told him that Tepas had asked why she, the victim, didn't like Katkus and what she thought of the governor. The meeting led nowhere. There was no investigation.

During my conversation with him, I asked Hansen what he thought of Parnell's "Choose Respect" campaign against sexual and domestic violence. He said, "The victims I've talked to feel it's just lip service. I'm dealing with women who are suicidal because of what has happened to them -- some attempting multiple times."

On Dec. 29, 2011, the lieutenant colonels spoke by phone with Parnell's chief of staff, Mike Nizich. Nizich had been present for other discussions and was the designated contact person for the chaplains. Nizich said he would convey their concerns to the governor. The chaplains stayed in touch with Nizich -- through Nizich's personal email, not his state email -- over the following months.

By early fall of 2013, state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, had been briefed on the allegations about the Guard. He knew one of the chaplains through their service together on a community board. Dyson said he went to the governor with information about the pervasive climate of "boys will be boys" and the "circling of the wagons" around alleged perpetrators in the Guard.

"It appeared to me that the governor was not giving enough credibility to the information the chaplains were giving him," Dyson told me.

In October 2013, reporter Sean Cockerham wrote a story about the sexual assault allegations for the Daily News. Cockerham reported that Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a member of the Guard and a former Anchorage police officer, had been appointed to investigate the charges of sexual misconduct. (I'm told she was appointed by Brig. Gen. Catherine Jorgensen.)

The chaplains were asking why it had taken so long. It had been three years since they first told the governor what had happened to some women in the Guard.

After the Cockerham story appeared, Dyson went to the governor a second time, encouraging him to take an active role in addressing the chaplains' concerns. "The question of the propriety of the chaplains in speaking to the media came up," Dyson said. He meant the governor didn't like the fact they had talked to a reporter.

On Dec. 6, 2013, Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, summoned Lt. Col. Wawersik, the sexual assault investigator, to his office on JBER. He wanted to know if she had been giving information to Dyson. Wawersik told him she had not.

On Dec. 9, Pierre called two of the chaplains to his office. After asking which lawmakers they had talked to, Pierre asked them to sign a letter stating that they would not talk to legislators. Both declined, saying they would first have to consult an attorney. They were not allowed to take a copy of Pierre's letter with them.

The next day, their attorney, Wayne Anthony Ross of Anchorage, wrote to Pierre asking for a copy of the document. He also asked Pierre to explain the "established guidelines" he had referenced in his discussion with the two chaplains.

As of Friday, almost five months after he wrote Pierre, Ross had not received a reply, he told me.

In February 2014, Dyson contacted the governor a third time and again strongly encouraged him to act. Two weeks later the governor requested a federal investigation.

When I asked Dyson why he thought it had taken so long for the governor to do something, he said, "He was too loyal to his people" and he "lacked a healthy skepticism."

I think that's a charitable analysis. I'll just say it doesn't suggest the governor had an excess of concern for sexual assault victims, or the need for a functional National Guard.

Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, has been asking some of the same questions I have about these events. This past Friday, when I emailed the governor's office asking to talk to Parnell about the Guard, his spokeswoman sent me a copy of a letter the governor had just sent to French.

In the letter, Parnell suggested it wasn't possible for him to have followed up on the chaplains' sexual assault information. He posed this question to French:

"Did the chaplains also tell you they were unable to state case-specific detail with our office to substantiate their concerns because of their duty of confidentiality to the individuals they counseled?"

The governor conveniently overlooks the fact that the sexual assaults had been reported earlier within the chain of command. Presumably all Parnell would have had to do was ask the nearest general to get him the names and allegations of all the Guard soldiers who had reported being raped in the last few years. And if that didn't work, his office already had the victims' statements, and someone there had talked to victims.

Parnell's letter continued: "Even without detail specific enough to pinpoint a victim willing to report, nor a perpetrator, we made sure through the Adjutant General that Guard members had a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations would be taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including any appropriate penalties. Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referral to the appropriate law enforcement agency."

And who was the Adjutant General who would ensure the safety and proper treatment of victims and the prosecution of perpetrators?

Thomas Katkus, of course.

Both of Alaska's U.S. senators, Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski, responded relatively quickly to the public allegations. Sean Parnell, the commander in chief of the Alaska Guard, waited nearly four years.

In the meantime, the victims suffered and the pirate ship sailed on.

Question: How many reports of sexual misconduct per year has the AK Guard seen as a whole each of last five years?

Our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Octavia Thompson, only tracks sexual assaults that are reported to her. There are several facets of sexual misconduct that don't rise to the level of sexual assault, things such as fraternization or sexual harassment, of which she does not track.

In addition, a victim may choose to file an unrestricted report or restricted report. If a victim chooses unrestricted reporting, it gives victim advocates permission to notify the victim's command and local law enforcement. Unrestricted reporting also gives us the opportunity to ensure offenders are disciplined to the full extent of our means.

Also, keep in mind that a victim can report a sexual assault to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, but his/her perpetrator does not have to be a member of the Alaska National Guard. We will still provide the victims with resources and assistance.

For unrestricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Unrestricted Reporting Cases
2014: 1 (This case has an alleged perpetrator who is NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2013: 8 (3 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 10 (All 10 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2

All of these cases were referred to local law enforcement.

Please note the broad military definition referenced below on sexual assault. The 2005 Defense Task Force on Sexual Harassment and Violence at the Military Service Academies report states:

> "Within the military community, the term sexual assault carries a more far-reaching meaning that encompasses everything from violent sexual acts such as rape, forcible sodomy, and assault with intent to commit rape or sodomy, to indecent assault. While indecent assault connotes violence, violence is not a prerequisite of the crime. Indecent assault can be a mere sexual touching that occurs without the consent of the person who is touched.

If a victim chooses to file a restricted report, we can only share information to the extent in which the victim gives permission. There could be instances in which a victim reports a sexual assault to a victim advocate, chaplain, medical personnel or the VA and chooses not to meet with the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Also, when a victim chooses to file a restricted report, their information is not shared with law enforcement or Guard leadership and is kept confidential. Law enforcement is only contacted when a victim files an unrestricted report.

For restricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Restricted Reporting Cases
2014: 0
2013: 3 (2 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 5 (All 5 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)

In summary, 37 cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009 reported to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator:

Year: Total Number of Reported Cases (Restricted and Unrestricted)
2014: 1
2013: 11
2012: 3
2011: 12
2010: 6
2009: 4

Of those 37 cases, when the alleged sexual assault occurred, 26 cases involved an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed an unrestricted report in 24 cases.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed a restricted report in 13 cases.

Gov. Parnell Asking For Investigation National Guard Sexual Assaults

Governor Parnell is asking the federal National Guard Bureau to investigate cases of sexual assault in Alaska's National Guard. In a press release, Parnell wrote he is "deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

The investigation follows a story from the Anchorage Daily News last October where alleged victims of sexual assault described an extensive problem in Alaska's National Guard.

Sean Cockerham is a reporter with McClatchy Newspapers Washington Bureau. He broke that story and is reporting on the investigation. He says he began hearing about problems in the Guard last year.

KTUU says Parnell's office this week released a Feb. 28 letter to National Guard Bureau chief Gen. Frank Grass that asks for an investigator to be appointed to examine open and closed investigations of alleged sexual assault.

Parnell spokeswoman, Sharon Leighow, says Grass quickly responded, and Parnell met last week with officials, including Col. Christian Rofrano, the chief counsel of the National Guard Bureau. Leighow says the scope of an investigation was discussed.

Alaska National Guard officials have said 29 cases of sexual assault have been reported since 2009. Of those, 21 were closed or suspended after law enforcement got involved.

Subject: more questions

Good morning, Sean,

Your questions and my answers are below. Please let me know if you need anything else.

Sincerely,

Candis

QUESTION:
I understand some things are not releasable, but I'd like to request at least a synopsis of what each of these soldiers is specifically alleged to have done. Also, are you saying the names of the soldiers involved will never be released? I'd like to renew my request for the names, or at least the ranks.

ANSWER:
Because these are personnel/administrative investigations (not criminal investigations), we are limited by regulation about what we can release. If we were to release some of what you are asking for, it could invalidate separation board proceedings and negatively impact our ability to pursue justice.

Allegations include a range of misconduct, from fraternization to misuse of government equipment.

Not every investigation was in response to victims coming forward and seeking assistance. In some cases, supervisors or commanders were notified of possible behaviors, and the commander pursued an inquiry (internal administrative investigation). In other cases, victims initiated a restricted report, which does not give permission for the organization to refer the case to law enforcement. And in some cases, the victim initiated an unrestricted report.

If law enforcement is unable to pursue the case due to lack of evidence, lack of cooperation by the victim, or a variety of other reasons, the adjutant general may request that the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (NGB/OCI) pursue an investigation. A secondary option is the administrative internal investigation to root out more details of the alleged activity.

QUESTION:
Will the charges for these soldiers be referred to law enforcement for possible criminal prosecution?

ANSWER:
It is always our practice to turn over all allegations of a criminal nature to local law enforcement.

Four of the cases were already referred to local law enforcement, and local law enforcement did not pursue the cases.

One of those four cases was referred to NGB/OCI, was investigated, and is still in process.

The other eight of the 12 investigations were initiated in order to look into allegations that did not indicate or claim actual criminal behavior—although such investigations may discover possible criminal behavior—or the victim chose not to report or pursue assistance from local law enforcement or cooperate with law enforcement.

To all DMVA employees:

We are about to turn the clock on a new year and 2014 will certainly be exciting!

There are many candidates for political office and many of them keep the Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs as a high priority. This can affect our department in many ways, one of which can lead to candidates contacting employees to get an official statement outside of the chain of command.

Employees are not authorized to give statements on behalf of the department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, and the Commissioner/ Adjutant General's office.

Our goal is to maintain the utmost professionalism in the workplace and the community, and this is one step to ensure we will be successful.

This mandate does not mean an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation. But the employee must make this contact during non-business hours with personal resources.

I look forward to a successful 2014 and I wish everyone a Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays!

Alaska National Guard unit being investigated for allegations of sexual misconduct

By Sean Cockerham
McClatchy Washington Bureau
Published: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 3:00 am
Last Modified: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 7:29 pm

WASHINGTON -- Current and former members of the Alaska National Guard say there's serious sexual misconduct within the ranks and an investigation of recruiters accused of rape is now underway.

Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a former Anchorage police officer, is investigating allegations of sexual assault as well as other offenses, such as inappropriate relationships with new recruits, by members of the Alaska Army Guard's recruiting and retention unit headquartered at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. Members of the guard said other soldiers are also under investigation.

Sgt. Rosa Ralls, a currently serving member of the Alaska National Guard who reported being raped in 2009 by a former member of the military, said the sexual assault problem is severe.

"It's horrible, it really is," she said.

Lt. Col. Rick Koch, the state command chaplain for the Alaska National Guard, and Lt. Col. Ted McGovern, a chaplain in the Alaska Army National Guard, questioned why it's taken so long for action.

The two chaplains said sexual assault victims have been coming to them for years, and that the majority were assaulted by fellow guard members. The chaplains said victims don't trust their commanders to help because of a history of mishandled complaints, in which victims felt that nothing was being done.

"There were lots of bread crumbs on the trail that were never taken seriously. It was almost shocking to think that somebody wouldn't try to bore down deeper than they did," Koch said.

Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general, confirmed "we do have some investigations going on." He said he could not discuss the details.

Katkus said the guard investigates all allegations of sexual misconduct.

"The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability," the general said in a written response to questions.

The military is grappling with a nationwide sexual assault crisis. The Pentagon reported a 35 percent increase over two years in the estimated number of military personnel victimized by sexual assault and related crimes. Sexual misconduct is already an issue in Alaska, where the commander of the Army National Guard's 49th Missile Defense battalion at Fort Greely was suspended this summer following complaints that he condoned affairs.

The Alaska National Guard is part of the state's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs. There are 1,905 members of the Army guard and another 2,029 serving in the air guard

Katkus said the federal National Guard Bureau has helped every state as the Department of Defense gained an understanding of the magnitude of the problem across the country.

The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator, he said, while it used to have to rely on its senior officers to investigate.

Chaplains Koch and McGovern said the administration of Alaska Gov. Sean Parnell, who oversees the Alaska National Guard, was told of sexual assault problems as far back as fall 2010.

The chaplains also said sexual harassment is pervasive in the Alaska guard and that the culture needs to change. "I would imagine every female in our organization has at least been harassed," Koch said.

The chaplains said some of the victims came to them through Lt. Col. Ken Blalock. Blalock said the first sexual assault victim, a subordinate, came to him around four years ago for help.

He said others soon followed after word got around that he would help them.

"I've had 15 sexual assault victims come to me," said Blalock, who is no longer in the National Guard.

Blalock said he brought sexual assault victims to the Anchorage police and the governor's office but nothing came of it except he got in trouble with his chain of command.

"I reported to police and the next thing I know I was getting my butt chewed by Gen. Katkus for daring to go outside of the chain of command with this stuff," Blalock said. "If a guardsman goes and robs a bank you call the police, you don't call the general."

Katkus said multiple agencies have looked into allegations by Blalock and "so far they haven't been able to substantiate too much."

In his written response to questions, Katkus said National Guard investigators pass information to law enforcement immediately when they became aware of possible criminal activity.

Katkus, a member of the governor's Cabinet as commissioner of Alaska's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs, was an officer in the Anchorage Police Department for more than 20 years.

He said that as a police officer he was learned firsthand to the impact that sexual assault has on victims and the community, and that he is committed to protecting members of the guard.

"It is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors," he said.

Lt. Col. Wawersik's investigation began in December and focuses on multiple members of the guard's recruiting unit. Wawersik declined to comment when reached by McClatchy.

Court filings show that this summer Wawersik sought and obtained a 20-day protective order against one of the soldiers, Master Sgt. John Nieves, who was a recruiting commander before being reassigned.

Wawersik wrote in the court filings that she was afraid Nieves would hurt or kill her.

"Nieves is a subject of a military investigation I am conducting regarding recruiter misconduct with recruits. . . . As a result of my investigation Nieves stands to lose his 20 year career and be publicly humiliated," she wrote.

Nieves told his counselor at Fort Richardson that "he has a specific plan in mind to harm me," Wawersik wrote in her petition for the protective order. The counselor took the threat seriously and contacted Wawersik to warn her, the petition said.

Wawersik also wrote that the Anchorage Police Department was conducting an undercover investigation "regarding Nieves offering an individual money to harm a witness in my investigation."

Police consider Nieves dangerous and advised her to get the protective order, Wawersik wrote. She added that, even as a former 10-year police officer, she had "never felt more in fear for her life."

Nieves has not been charged with any crime. He said at a July court hearing that the alleged threat against Wawersik was an overreaction. "It was a counselor, somebody I confide in with my issues, it just happened to be that day I was upset. . . . No woman should be under any threat. Period. I am sorry," Nieves said, according to an audio recording of the court hearing.

The judge declined to issue a long-term protective order.

Nieves, reached for comment last week, said he's never committed sexual assault and did not seek to harm any witness.

He said he is awaiting the conclusion of the National Guard's investigation.

"I haven't been charged with anything, just told that I'm being investigated for basically sexual misconduct. And that's it, that's all I know," he said.

Nieves said he couldn't discuss details while the investigation is ongoing.

"I wish I could, honestly, I do want to talk about it. . . . I haven't had any chance to clear my name at all."

The guard's problems have attracted the attention of Alaska's congressional delegation. Sen. Mark Begich said he started hearing last year from constituents about misconduct in the organization.

"We were getting such a frequency from a variety of sources that it told us there is something going on there," Begich said.

Begich said his inquiries led to a National Guard Bureau review of the Alaska Guard. While it didn't tackle the scope of the sexual assault issue, Begich said he thinks it triggered a broader review.

Sexual assault numbers are problematic, as it's a crime that's often unreported. Gen. Katkus said there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported since 2009 to the Alaska Army and Air National Guard's sexual assault response coordinator.

The alleged perpetrators were members of the military in 11 of the cases and civilians in the rest of them, according to Katkus.

In some cases the victim did not want the attack known. But most of the reports were referred for investigation to local law enforcement, he said, such as Anchorage police or state troopers.

Katkus said he is not aware of any prosecutions resulting from the cases.

Anchorage police offered little explanation in response to a series of questions from McClatchy, other than to say that its special victims unit works closely with the National Guard.

"The Anchorage Police Department has made targeting the problem of sexual assault in our community a priority, and each report of sexual assault submitted to APD is reviewed and investigated based on its individual circumstances and merit, regardless of suspect or victim affiliations," said spokeswoman Dani Myren.

National Guard Sgt. Ralls said she told the Anchorage police and National Guard about her rape in 2009, but never found justice.

"I have no trust for either organization," Ralls said.

Ralls obtained her police report and provided a copy to McClatchy. It shows the Anchorage Police Department investigated the alleged rape. But the last entry, which was from 2011, said the case was suspended awaiting analysis of a DNA sample from her alleged attacker. Anchorage police did not respond to an inquiry about the status of her case.

Ralls said she believes her attacker slipped something in her drink. Melissa Jones, who said she was raped while in the Alaska National Guard in 2007, also said she thinks she was drugged.

Jones said she told her guard supervisors about the rape and was then confronted by her fellow soldiers with rumors, including that she'd been gang raped by the entire F Company.

Jones, who does not know who raped her, said the guard gave her no help.

Jones said she left Alaska but was traumatized by what happened, started cutting herself, and at one point attempted suicide.

"I am extremely angry," she said.

Sean,

Thank you for the opportunity to give input prior to the publishing of your story on my department. I would like to state my position right up front so you get an accurate understanding on my attitude towards this issue. As Commissioner for the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs and Adjutant General for the Alaska National Guard, it is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors. Unequivocally, these actions simply have no place in any American work environment.

As both a state and federal entity, we treat such complaints with the utmost sensitivity and follow the clearly established checklist procedure in initiating the appropriate action. As DoD gained an understanding of the magnitude and impact of this problem, we have been extremely fortunate that the National Guard Bureau has provided important resourcing to every state, territory, and District of Columbia. The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator on staff. Prior to this vital resource as a part of our inventory, we relied on our senior Officers to conduct military investigations. If any of these investigations developed the elements of a crime, the case was immediately passed to local law enforcement and/or the Army's Criminal Investigative Division (CID).

Since 2009 there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported from the Air and Army National Guard to our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Our leadership and investigating officers are trained to coordinate with CID and local law enforcement immediately when they become aware that a crime may have been committed. Out of the above mentioned 29 cases, the victim chose to restrict reporting in 11 of those cases. Of the 29 cases, 18 had civilian perpetrators and 11 were military. Local law enforcement, such as Anchorage Police Department or the Alaska State Troopers were contacted in approximately 21 cases, and for specific reasons, APD/AST did not open an investigation.

During the course of military investigations, if our investigators become aware of possible criminal behavior, immediate contact and consultation begins with local law enforcement and/or CID. Those that do not rise to the level of criminal activity are addressed by command in accordance with established military policies and regulations.

I cannot confirm or deny the names of any individuals under investigation, according to Department of Defense personnel policy. Any person under investigation has the right to privacy and the right to due process. I cannot comment on the status of any ongoing investigation. However, in the interest of good order and discipline, we take appropriate action to investigate any and all allegations while ensuring the safety and security of possible victims while simultaneously protecting the rights of anyone suspected of inappropriate behavior.

The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability. Sexual assault and harassment is inconsistent with our values and it erodes trust and confidence. When an allegation is substantiated, we deal with it within the full measure of applicable policy, regulation, and law.

As you may know, I have been a Traditional Alaskan National Guardsman for over 37 years. I spent 21.5 years serving as a full time police officer with the Municipality of Anchorage in a wide range of assignments and eventually retired in 2000 as the Captain of the Resource Division. During my very active career with the Anchorage Police Department, I was exposed first-hand to the effect that sexual assault has on a person and our community. I spent my entire first full-time career under sworn oath as a Police Officer to keep Anchorage safe. Now, still under sworn oath as a federally recognized officer in the US military, I continue work to ensure every one of our Alaska National Guardsmen and our state work force have a secure work environment free from any harassment or abuse.

Is that correct?

What prompted the investigation and when did it begin?

What are the names and ranks of the soldiers who are under investigation?

What, if any, action has the guard taken against them?

When will the investigation be concluded?

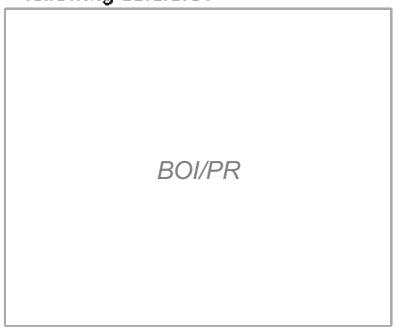
Is there any indication that members of the recruiting and retention unit were also involved in dealing drugs?

2. I am told the broader sexual assault problem in the Alaska National Guard has been going on for years. Why did it take so long for this investigation to happen?

3. What exactly has the guard done about the sexual assault complaints over the past five years?

4. Do you have statistics on reported sexual assaults in the Alaska National Guard over the past five years?

If so, how many do your numbers show?



5. Retired Lt. Col. Ken Blalock says he brought sexual assault victims to the Anchorage police and governor's office, but nothing came of it except he got in trouble with his chain of command. "I reported to police and the next thing I know I was getting my butt chewed by General Katkus for going out of the chain of command with this stuff," he said.

Is that an accurate characterization? Did you ever discourage anyone from taking complaints to law enforcement? Did you ever involve law enforcement in this issue and, if not, why not?

Has law enforcement taken any action against your soldiers for sexual assault within the past five years?

6. I am also told sexual harassment is a substantial problem in the Alaska National Guard. Is that the case and, if so, what has the guard done about it?

7. What is the current status of the following soldiers?

Thanks much. My direct phone number is 202-383-6016.

Setting the record straight for Alaskans
April 28, 2014
By Governor Sean Parnell

In response to a recent opinion piece (Sunday, April 27) regarding the Alaska National Guard that was full of false statements and inferences designed to mislead readers, I am compelled to set the record straight.

First and foremost, the author's claim that I did nothing when first hearing the concerns from National Guard chaplains about sexual assault complaints is utterly false.

Since my days in the state Legislature to my time as governor, my top priority has been to eliminate sexual assault and domestic violence in Alaska, including the military.

The chaplains provided general information to me that sexual assaults were occurring in the Guard, but because of their duty of confidentiality to the people they counsel, the chaplains could not disclose names of victims, perpetrators, or specific circumstances.

Nevertheless, even without specific enough details to pinpoint a victim or case, I went to Adjutant General Tom Katkus, requesting information regarding what the chaplains had told me. I made sure through Gen. Katkus that Guard members have a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations are taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including appropriate penalties.

Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referrals to the appropriate law enforcement agency, such as the Anchorage Police Department.

Further, the opinion piece asserts that Sen. Fred Dyson came to me a number of times with concerns about what he heard from the same chaplains. During Sen. Dyson's visit with me last fall, he too had only general allegations. On Feb. 26, 2014, Sen. Dyson gave me the name of a Guard member who was willing to provide specific detail.

Within 24 hours of that meeting, I personally phoned the person named by Sen. Dyson. In that call, I learned of specific, but unverified allegations, causing me to question the existing reporting and investigation process.

Two days later, within a day of getting specific details about the reporting system – not two weeks, as the columnist claims – I sent my request to General Grass, chief of the National Guard Bureau, for a review of all open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among Alaska National Guard members.

The National Guard Bureau responded quickly, and currently has a team in Alaska conducting the review.

The columnist's claim that our administration had enough specifics to act on before 2014 is based on two instances: First, the writer alleges that Katie TePas of my office

RE: Request for Investigator, Office of Complex Administrative Investigations

Dear General Grass,

I request the detailing of a CNGB Complex Investigation Program Investigator to investigate open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard. I request that you issue a detailed memorandum allowing the investigator to act under my authority to gain access to State personnel and records to the extent allowed under State law and regulation.

I am extremely proud of our Alaska National Guard members and their professionalism in carrying out their duties. However, I remain deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard. Not only are individuals victimized and traumatized in these circumstances, but collectively our National Guard is harmed – from morale to mission damage.

In recent years, Adjutant General Thomas Katkus has emphasized strong systems for reporting, investigating, and tracking such cases; and he has raised awareness among Guard members to these issues through "sensing" sessions. Information I recently learned, however, compels me to write and seek an outside look at our Alaska National Guard's training, reporting, investigations, and case dispensation practices related to the areas I outlined above. Where a number of matters were referred to civilian law enforcement who declined to investigate, I ask you to review those matters, as well. In my estimation, the review should include the National Guard's command structure and its responses to these cases, up to and including TAG.

I am willing to meet with your investigator, along with my Chief of Staff, Mike Nizich, in order to assist in planning and conducting the investigation. I have directed my Chief of Staff to ensure your investigator receives the full cooperation of State National Guard personnel. I have directed my

Attorney General, Michael Geraghty, to provide legal advice as necessary. When the investigation is complete, I will make myself or my designee available for an Out-Brief with the investigator. Your investigator will receive full cooperation from all units, guardsmen and women, and civilians within the Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs who are under my authority. If your investigator receives resistance in regard to the investigation from any individual under my authority, please have your investigator contact my Chief of Staff or my Deputy Chief of Staff, Cindy Sims.

Your investigator's point of contact is Chief of Staff Mike Nizich at 907-465-3500 or Deputy Chief Cindy Sims at 907-269-7450. They will provide cell numbers once initial contact has been made.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

The Honorable Lisa Murkowski

MAY 2 1 2014

Dear Senator Murkowski:

This is in response to your letter dated June 19, 2013, regarding allegations that the command climate within the Alaska National Guard (AKNG) is not conducive to reporting and investigating sexual assaults and that, in some instances, officials may have taken steps to cover up incidents of sexual assault.

Our letter of July 18, 2013, indicated that the DoD Hotline referred the allegations to the Department of the Army Inspector General (Army IG) for action (case number 20130620-014429). Our letter of March 6, 2014, indicated that officials within the Directorate for Investigations of Senior Officials (ISO) opened case number 20130715-014791-CASE-01 to monitor the senior official investigation by the Army IG.

On April 15, 2014, the Army IG completed the investigation and forwarded the Report of Investigation to ISO officials for review. The Army IG investigation found AKNG command climate sensing sessions did not identify concerns regarding sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting, and that The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents.

The Army IG report noted the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, AKNG, received reports of 11 alleged sexual assault incidents (since February 2012) and promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities. Alaska State Statute, "Military Code of Alaska," Section 26.05, dictates that Alaska state civilian law enforcement authorities investigate, and the Alaska civilian criminal system prosecute, cases involving AKNG member suspects. The TAG took adverse administrative action on the only two cases upon which he could act; those which substantiated sexual assault allegations against AKNG members. In one case, the TAG discharged the subject from the AKNG, and in the other, he initiated the subject's separation.

On May 6, 2014, ISO Oversight Branch officials completed a review of the Army IG investigation and concurred with the findings and conclusions.

Should you have questions, please contact me at 703-604-8324.

Governor Parnell Continues Efforts to Reform National Guard
Governor Meets with Brigadier General Mott

September 24, 2014, Anchorage, Alaska – Less than a week after naming Brigadier General Jon K. Mott to lead the special project team that will implement the recommendations in the National Guard's Office of Complex Investigations' (OCI) assessment report, Governor Sean Parnell met with the general in Anchorage.

General Mott, the assistant adjutant general for the Connecticut National Guard, presented his plan to establish separate collaborative working groups designed around each major recommendation in the OCI report, including sexual assault/misconduct, equal opportunity and equal employment opportunity, coordination with law enforcement, management of misconduct, command climate, and administration of justice. The review teams will be primarily made up of Guard members of different ranks and occupations, to encourage a wide range of expertise and viewpoints.

"I am impressed with General Mott's focus and pleased with the work that has already been done to establish a system to address these issues going forward," Governor Parnell said. "General Mott and his team are personally committed, as am I, to restoring trust in Guard leadership. While some changes may be able to be implemented quickly, we will not rush this process. We will take the time needed to properly apply the recommendations from the National Guard Bureau."

The governor has directed General Mott to provide him with weekly briefings on the special project team's progress.

The meeting with General Mott follows a conversation the governor had this weekend with senior leaders of the Alaska Army National Guard and dozens of members of the Air Guard held at the Arctic Warrior Event Center, Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. The meeting's focus centered on three important areas: professional ethics, developing trust throughout the organization, and ensuring the Guard is meeting its obligations as a uniformed force.

A military investigation has cleared higher ups within the Alaska National Guard of mishandling sexual assault cases. The Army Inspector General's report, completed last month, also found that guard members did not feel concerned about the issue.

A brief summary of tha findings was made public Wadnesday in a one-page letter sent to Sen. Lisa Murkowski by the Department of Defense Inspector General, who had oversight over the investigation because senior officials within the Guard were under scrutiny. The agency finished its review early this month, and this week told Murkowski it concurred with the Army IG's findings.

The letter, signed by Acting Assistant Inspector General for Communications Larry D. Turner, concludes "...The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and othar AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents."

Gen. Thomas Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general and also serves as commissioner of the state Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, is satisfied with the Army findings, according to Maj. Candis Olmstead, public affairs director for the Alaska National Guard.

"Gen. Katkus is glad that the investigation was handled by an outside federal agency which has no agenda but ... to determine truth. He is cautiously guarded because there will always be room for improvement. But he is looking forward to seeing what areas we can improve upon," Olmstead said.

The IG's letter comes close to a year after Murkowski asked the independent agency to look into allegations that dysfunction within the Alaska National Guard's command climate impeded the reporting and investigation of sexual assaults, including attempts by some officials to try cover up incidents. Murkowski called for the investigation after two chaplains from the Alaska National Guard came to her seeking help. The chaplains have for some time tried to get help for victims they believe weren't helped the way they should have been.

Another victim advocate, Lt. Col. Ken Blaylock, who retired in 2012, has voiced similar concerns.

Since leaving the guard, Blaylock, a former National Guard commander and staff officer, has emerged as a tenacious whistleblower with a laundry list of complaints about the command structure. He said this week he was unconvinced by the IG report, which clears that command structure of allegations it mishandled and coverad up sexual assault cases.

"It's interesting that the inspector general did not interview me, since I have documentation which disproves his conclusions. I wonder how many other victims and witnesses he did not interview," said Blaylock.

The report has not yet been made public or released to Murkowksi.

In the letter to Murkowski, the inspector general indicates the report also addresses the climate in which Guard members are operating and whether they had concerns about sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting. "Climate sensing sessions" found no such concerns, according to Turner's letter.

Blaylock has asserted that climate surveys have in the past been used to smoke out anyone who might speak against the command structure. Out of fear of retaliation, people choose not to speak up, he said. Plus, Blaylock said, before the investigative team showed up, the Alaska National Guard held mandatory briefings in which the stories of some sexual assault situations were discredited, and procedures about proper handling of cases reiterated.

Olmstead said climate surveys are always anonymous and the survey-takers are not subject to retribution for their answers. Only if the participant chooses to put his or her name on it would their identity be known, she said. Surveys may help a new commander get a sense for the working climate within the unit, and different command levels may also review the surveys "to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment," she said.

Olmstead also said that while "all call" meetings did take place prior to the IG investigation and surveys, they were not convened for the purposes of skewing the results. All call meetings, which everyone attends, are not uncommon, and during those meetings information about process and procedure is often discussed. At no time were sexual assault stories or situations discredited, she said.

Blaylock has also questioned whether the IG actually had a chance to look at all of the evidence, meet with all of the victims and follow how all of the cases were handled, or if it followed only those cases the National Guard gave it access to.

In its inquiry, the Army IG found that 11 cases of alleged sexual assault were referred to Alaska law enforcement authorities — proper procedure since military code requires investigation and prosecution of cases involving Alaska National Guard suspects. It also found that Katkus took action against two suspects, each time after the sexual assault allegations were substantiated against Guard members. Consequences included being discharged and separated from the Guard.

"We definitely did not just pass on a select group of cases. All of the cases that have been reported have been documented. And all of that information was readily available to the inspector general's team," Olmstead said.

Everything follows policy and procedure, and everything is reported, she said.

She also pointed out that Blaylock, who has not actively been a part of the command for nearly two years, is not is a position to have firsthand information about current cases or the way things have been handled.

Through its public affairs chief, Bridget Ann Serchak, the Department of Defense Inspector General declined to comment on the scope or procedures employed during its investigation. If someone like Blaylock had continued concerns, they were welcome to call the IG's hotline and initiate a whistleblower complaint and through that process could be interviewed, she said.

A Murkowski spokesman said the senator is withholding comment until she has an opportunity to see the full report.

RTQ, Lisa Demer (ADN) 21 May 2014

Good evening, Lisa.

I had all but one of these answers to your questions (below) ready for you yesterday, and sent you an email stating that I was waiting for some additional information. I was fact-checking another document that shares the Alaska National Guard's data on sexual assaults so that I could provide it to you as well (it is attached).

However, I saw that your story ran last night, so I worked on other priorities today. Maybe this information will still be helpful if you do a follow up story about how allegations about our organization could not be substantiated by a Department of Defense inspector general team. In fact, the IG team stated that "The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any sexual assault incidents," and the sexual assault response coordinator "promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities."

If you are interested in doing a story on how our organization helps our members who are sexual assault victims, a service rarely provided in other agencies or organizations, I would be happy to provide you with additional details and put you in touch with our lead SARC.

Once the OCI assessment concludes, you may need more information from the Alaska National Guard. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions. I will do my best to find you answers. Depending on your questions and the people I have to contact for the answers, and their schedules and availability, it is fair to need about two business days to reply in some cases. I will reply as promptly as possible. And if you have a story deadline that I am aware of, I will try to expedite.

Answers to your questions:

1. The command climate survey is used for various purposes, such as when a unit gets a new commander and he or she would like a better understanding of the working climate within the unit, or periodically at different command levels to assess how members of the unit feel about the quality of their work environment.

The current command climate survey that all members of the Alaska National Guard have been asked to take part in was requested by the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigation, in an effort to assess the overall health and wellness of the Alaska National Guard. The survey seeks members' input regarding the entire Alaska National Guard. The last day for members to complete the survey is June 1.

The survey is completely anonymous and no one can be personally identified in connection with their input.

2. The four phases of the OCI assessment are 1) Intake, 2) Interviews and Review, 3) Assessment and 4) Finalize Report.

Phase 1 Intake
-Command Climate Survey
-Data Collection

Phase 2 Interviews and Review
-OCI Ground Assessment begins
-Interviews with AKNG members, State Prosecutors office and Law Enforcement -Travel to identified/requested installations

Phase 3 Assessment
-OCI team returns to NGB to assess data and draft a preliminary report -OCI returns to Alaska as needed

Phase 4 Finalize Report
-Initial coordination may be made with JFHQ and/or Governor's Office at Governor's discretion -NGB-JA conducts legal review -Out brief provided at Governor's request

3. OCI team left Monday morning.

4. OCI team works for Chief of the National Guard Bureau, and they work in the Pentagon.

Please see the attached, which should provide additional helpful details.

Best Regards,

From January 2009 to May 20, 2014, there were nine sexual assaults reported by victims in the Alaska National Guard whose offender was also a member of the Alaska National Guard. In the same timeframe, there were 26 sexual assaults reported by Alaska National Guard members whose offender was not in the AKNG, but was someone from the community. The bar graph illustrates the number of sexual assaults reported by AKNG victims and compares the number of non-member offenders with the number of AKNG offenders. The numbers and years all reflect when the assault occurred, not necessarily when the report occurred.

Uninformed, inaccurate reporting is painting the wrong picture of the Alaska National Guard

In the past seven months, two news writers have contacted the Alaska National Guard with questions regarding sexual assault in the organization. All additional news reports have recycled inaccurate, misconstrued information. Interviews with Alaska National Guard leadership have resulted in reports that left out key, relevant details.

Media and politicians who lack correct information and have chosen not to pursue accurate, current data have made multiple false and defamatory statements about the Alaska National Guard.

Every commentary printed to date in local media was written without the author contacting the Alaska National Guard for information. The authors did not give us an opportunity to correct inaccuracies or provide facts, but chose to regurgitate information that had already been reported without fact-checking. Others are using this sensitive subject for political posturing, disparaging our organization to advance their political or commentary careers as they generalize and exaggerate reality.

Here are the facts.

1. In the Alaska National Guard, there have been nine reports of sexual assault that have occurred in the past 5 ½ years in which the alleged perpetrator was a member of the organization. (This includes data from January 2009 through May 20, 2014.)

   A. Nine reported assaults in five-and-a-half years averages fewer than two reported assaults per year. In this 4,000-member organization, 1/20th of one percent of our membership has reported a sexual assault.
   B. Of these nine assaults, one occurred on duty at duty location. Three occurred on a military installation off-duty. Five occurred after hours, off-location.
   C. There was one report of a sexual assault committed by a member of the Alaska National Guard in 2013. There have been zero reports in 2014.

2. Nearly three-quarters of the sexual assaults reported since 2009 were committed by perpetrators who were not in the Alaska National Guard. We track these numbers because we want to help victims regardless of who assaulted them, or when the assault happened. Yet these numbers continue to be included in data that media and politicians are citing when they misrepresent our organization and suggest that we have such a high number of assaults in our ranks. They say we have a culture that tolerates this behavior.

How many other organizations have full-time support personnel dedicated to meeting with victims and helping them through the difficulties after being assaulted? We do.

We don't just point them to a counselor. Our sexual assault response coordinators and victim advocates are with victims every step of the way, to the extent that the victim allows.

Our sexual assault response coordinators go with victims to appointments, court dates, sit with them when they are being questioned by law enforcement, check in with them, and notify them of the status of their cases when possible. These services are offered to all victims who report, regardless of when the offense took place or who the perpetrator was.

3. Two chaplains shared with a reporter for an October 2013 print media article that there were victims in the Alaska National Guard who had not received proper, timely response from the organization, and victims were not taken seriously with regard to being sexually assaulted.

After that media coverage, the chaplains shared previously undisclosed details of their cases with our sexual assault response coordinator so that she could cross-reference the names with those victims who had reported to a victim advocate or a sexual assault response coordinator.

Every victim who sought support from our chaplains had either reported their assault and was receiving support from our sexual assault response coordinators; or chose to report only, but not seek further assistance; or chose not to report, while knowing that assistance is available.

All unrestricted reports had been referred to local law enforcement. Of the cases that local law enforcement did not pursue, one met criteria that allowed us to request further review by the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations. We referred that case, and they sent an OCI team to investigate further.

4. The Alaska National Guard does not have criminal justice authority over sexual assaults or other non-military criminal offenses in the way that active duty military services do. Some politicians and partisan commentators have incorrectly suggested that the Alaska National Guard, rather than local law enforcement and the court system, should pursue prosecution of sexual assault. This is not possible, as civilian offenses such as sexual assault may only be prosecuted by civilian criminal justice authorities, per state law.

These uninformed individuals have also asserted that we chose not to be proactive in our response to victim reporting. This is also incorrect, as every unrestricted report has been referred to local law enforcement.

5. The Alaska National Guard pursues administrative action in response to local law enforcement and Office of Complex Investigation results. Some members who have committed acts of sexual assault or sexual harassment have lost rank, been forced out of the organization, lost command, or been administratively reassigned pending the outcome of administrative boards.

In order to ensure due process for the subject and the alleged victim, these actions take time. Due to required confidentiality and respect for privacy, personnel who are not directly involved in the administrative actions are not privy to the status or details of pending actions. This may be the reason for some people's concerns about timeliness or level of response; they are unaware of the status for each case, and therefore make incorrect assumptions that cases are not pursued.

6. There are three sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates throughout the Alaska National Guard. We have individual and class training, sensing sessions (feedback discussions), "all-calls" for leadership to communicate directly with all personnel, in addition to a video message from leadership, announcements, advertisements, articles, posters, brochures, presentation tables, and social media posts. All of this to ensure in every way possihle that we have resources in place to help victims.

Communications are consistent and often so the message will be clearly understood that sexual assault is not tolerated. We do many things to ensure our members know our stance on sexual assault, including encouraging them to come forward for support in the event that they have been assaulted.

7. Of the nine assaults that allegedly occurred since 2009 by a member of the Alaska National Guard,

A. Five were off-base, off-duty.
B. Four were rapes.
C. Five were inappropriate touching with clothes on.
D. Seven were referred to law enforcement (the other two were restricted reports—a decision made by the victim—which therefore could not be prosecuted or otherwise further pursued while in such status.)
E. None have been prosecuted.

8. Administrative investigations in the National Guard are now conducted by the Office of Complex Investigations but this program has only been funded since 2012. Prior to this, local units did not have the resources or guidance to fully and properly respond to reports of sexual assaults and were limited to "15-6" Investigations (in the Army National Guard) or "Commander Directed Investigations" (in the Air National Guard).

One assault is too many. But in an organization that draws members from a community of citizens who live in the state with the highest rate of sexual assaults in the nation, 1/20th of one percent is not the epidemic proportion being portrayed by some journalists and politicians.

We are very proud of the many distinguished Soldiers and Airmen in the Alaska National Guard who proudly serve our state and nation. We will continue to educate them, protect them and pursue justice within the means we have.

We hope that others who care about the people in our organization will focus on the real needs and concerns we must address, and hold their fire, even though they are being misinformed by cynical political agendas.

Governor Sean Parnell has been responding to allegations that sexual assault crimes within the state's National Guard were reported to him four years before he requested a federal investigation. The Governor says as soon as he had specific information, he acted. Parnell's commissioner of the Department of Military and Veteran's Affairs, Major General Thomas Katkus says the federal investigation should help improve the system.

Major General Thomas Katkus

Major General Thomas Katkus, how large do you think the sexual assault issue is within Alaska?

The numbers I've got show us below what it would be in Alaska, we have a different number, total number of cases, because we track victims, don't track it as if we've got that many suspects. We've got 37 cases; of those 37 cases we have only 11 reported sexual assaults are Guard members as perpetrators. My position is even one is too many and it's a problem – a large problem; 37 cases over the past 5 years.

How does Alaska compare to military nationally for sexual assault?

With Alaska being the highest sexual assault in the nation, dark climate, small houses, alcohol, there is a lot of propensity toward that kind of activity, which is unfortunate but also very rampant in cold, dark climates. I think the problem is getting better results with the resources being put toward it. The Guard is community based so we have a lot of resources beyond DOD. We have a lot of members in the National Guard that are counselors or lawyers so we have resources. The issue is out there fairly evenly across all services but we're better equipped to offer services.

Does the legal structure of the Guard make it more cumbersome, more difficult to track cases and get information, Anchorage Police Department handling cases? Helpful or more difficult?

Difficult to address. We as a National Guard, we don't have an independent criminal justice system. We're not like active duty that has its own Uniform Code of Military Justice to address specifically infractions within the National Guard, because we have members that are also traditional, that go home at night and are under the laws of their communities. The authorities that cover our members are really the local authorities, the state troopers or other law enforcement. It's not our purview to supplement that. We take our own disciplinary actions through normal business practices, rules and regulation enforcement and then we have discipline. But we don't incarcerate individuals. We don't have a requirement; that our preponderance of evidence is what we go off of, 50% is civil action as opposed to beyond a reasonable doubt in any type of criminal investigation.

Governor Parnell said he acted to call for a national investigation as soon as he had specifics. What kind of specific information is needed to prompt an investigation?

For the National Guard Bureau that the Governor asked, it's just the request of the Governor. The Governor, anytime he has a desire to have an independent assessment or look into an organization he's responsible with, which would be the Air Guard or the Army Guard, he can contact the National Guard Bureau, advise them of the problem and they would propose the best solutions to step forward to look into it. Because it could be a safety issue, it could be an area of concern on finance, so either the safety investigators would come out or an auditor. Or in this case to look at a problem with how the reporting system is or an assessment of how overall, we are addressing sexual assaults or sexual harassment in the National Guard. So, in this case, again, he puts the problem statement forward and they provide the resource that best answers that.

Why wouldn't chaplains risking their positions to bring the concerns forward to the Governor be enough to prompt an investigation by the DOD?

I don't know that I have an answer for that. The Chaplains shouldn't be at risk for bringing any of these issues forward. There's no risk to them to, matter of fact it's incumbent on them to bring those issues forward. Their job description is pretty much, they advise the command....trying to make sure I get this right so that this is fairly accurate. The significant responsibility that they're held to is to advise the commander of issues of ethics, morals and morale within an organization. So they're almost held on a no harm, no foul. They're required to bring the bad news forward if they've got the bad news.

Well it seems there was some confusion or hesitancy in that regard. Your deputy commissioner asked the chaplains to sign a document saying they wouldn't speak on behalf of the Guard, when actually what they were doing was bringing victims concerns forward. Did you ask him to do those things or was that something he felt he needed to do as deputy commissioner?

I believe the letter you're referring to is a letter that went out to all of our members as we approached the political season. It was advising everyone to be very judicious and cautious on how they answer anyone that is approaching them and asking them for an official position of the department. So in that sense that was just to reiterate to clear it with a supervisor and we're not prohibiting anybody from talking to the press, their chain of command or other people. Just that they try to clear that, get the best information possible and if they're speaking for the department, make sure they clear it through our public affairs office in order to make sure we have the best, most accurate information out there.

Do you think there needs to be changes in reporting and how people can bring these concerns forward to help boost confidence for people who are taking on the very difficult thing to have to come forward and talk about trauma and painful episodes they may have experienced?

Absolutely, especially with as many deployments as we have because it's not only in the area of sexual assault, it's any type of experience that they are not normally exposed to in civilian activity. So there are traumatic events in everyone's life. We follow DOD policy and its changing constantly. I think in the last five years the department of defense has definitely stepped up its game. It's provided additional resources and of the limited training dollars, a significant amount of that resource is directed to bystander training, self help awareness to educate people about reporting any type of sexual assault or activity related to it. Then the resourcing for the investigation of those has increased and we've worked on training our investigators to investigate the civilian equivalent complaints of sexual harassment. WE have additional resources that would look into any allegations of sexual assault, after the law enforcement have also been engaged on that same topic. And then the victim advocacy program we have. Multiple victim advocates have been assigned to the Guard as of late. Currently have three sexual assault coordinators assigned and 42 victim advocates assigned to the National Guard. So your question was, do I see better ways to do it? We can always improve but it is an incredible change over the past five years to where we are now.

Major General, how damaging is this for morale?

You know, it's damaging for morale, but where I'm very, very concerned, is we've made great strides in making people aware, we have a process in place, it's very transparent and they can feel comfortable reporting and they're going to get the help. With all of the adverse press and the senior officials who have basically expressed their concern and trust, I would hope that would not translate to the other end of the food chain to the young members who may be victimized and may now decide not to come forward because of lack of trust in the system. The DOD has spent five years trying to put in place a system that works and I'm very afraid that this might be undermined by the lack of confidence that may be generated by this perception that is out there.

Are you confident that when this investigation is over, that the system will show there are no major problems with how the guard is handling reporting and the cases that come forward?

I'm confident that the assessment will come in with a better way of doing it. This is the first time we've really stepped back and evaluated from top to bottom, the entire process. I would hope they would come in and advise us of better ways to do business. So we look forward to what we will get as feedback. My feeling is we have a good system in place right now, it's a workable system that follows all of DOD's processes and regulations and I'm thinking an outside look will provide that much more suggestions that we can incorporate and make this better.

My last question would be, you just mentioned Guard members and a perception of what's happening. What would be your concern about perception? We know there are high rates of assault, what perception are you concerned about?

Well, the perception I'm concerned about is that, in the past five years, 70% of reported assaults, the perpetrator was a member of our community, not the National Guard. So 11 assaults in five years, those members were Guard members who committed those acts, so out of 37 cases, only 11 have we had to discipline one of our own members over. The rest, the other 26 cases, are all cases were we have provided exceptional support for the victim. Those victim advocates have engaged. We've taken the victims to local law enforcement, supported them through all of the issues and tried to make sure we could be there for them. That's what's not getting reported here is DOD as an organization has provided incredible response in taking care of the soldiers and airmen that are assigned in the National Guard and that's where I'm really afraid the perception is being missed here.

Is the Guard looking at, the people who have been victimized. Are there efforts underway to track back and look at where are people getting into positions where they're at risk. Is there research into that so you can help young men and young women avoid some of those pitfalls?

There's always different types of training we have people exposed to and mandate and some of the best is bystander training where not only do you train people to look out for themselves and not put themselves into harm's way but also train soldiers to look out for other people that may be inadvertently putting themselves in harm's way. So they teach them how to carefully approach a situation and defuse it. Sometimes a third party, that extra set of eyes that the potential victim may not be able to see. So your answer is yes, we're training people to be safer and we're training them to look out for each other and realistically that's how you start solving all of these problems is everyone becomes aware of looking out for each other.

Major General Thomas Katkus Responds To National Guard Sexual Assault Allegations

By Lori Townsend, APRN - Anchorage | May 1, 2014 - 6:04 pm

You know, it's damaging for morale, but where I'm very, very concerned, is we've made great strides in making people aware, we have a process in place, it's very transparent and they can feel comfortable reporting and they're going to get the help. With all of the adverse press and the senior officials who have basically expressed their concern and trust, I would hope that would not translate to the other end of the food chain to the young members who may be victimized and may now decide not to come forward because of lack of trust in the system. The DOD has spent five years trying to put in place a system that works and I'm very afraid that this might be undermined by the lack of confidence that may be generated by this perception that is out there.

Are you confident that when this investigation is over, that the system will show there are no major problems with how the guard is handling reporting and the cases that come forward?

I'm confident that the assessment will come in with a better way of doing it. This is the first time we've really stepped back and evaluated from top to bottom, the entire process. I would hope they would come in and advise us of better ways to do business. So we look forward to what we will get as feedhack. My feeling is we have a good system in place right now, it's a workable system that follows all of DOD's processes and regulations and I'm thinking an outside look will provide that much more suggestions that we can incorporate and make this better.

My last question would be, you just mentioned Guard members and a perception of what's happening. What would be your concern about perception? We know there are high rates of assault, what perception are you concerned about?

Well, the perception I'm concerned about is that, in the past five years, 70% of reported assaults, the perpetrator was a member of our community, not the National Guard. So 11 assaults in five years, those members were Guard members who committed those acts, so out of 37 cases, only 11 have we had to discipline one of our own members over. The rest, the other 26 cases, are all cases were we have provided exceptional support for the victim. Those victim advocates bave engaged. We've taken tbe victims to local law enforcement, supported them through all of the issues and tried to make sure we could be there for them. That's what's not getting reported here is DOD as an organization has provided incredible response in taking care of the soldiers and airmen that are assigned in the National Guard and that's where I'm really afraid the perception is being missed here.

Is the Guard looking at, the people who have heen victimized. Are there efforts underway to track hack and look at where are people getting into positions wherc they're at risk. Is there research into that so you can help young men and young women avoid some of those pitfalls?

There's always different types of training we have people exposed to and mandate and some of the best is bystander training where not only do you train people to look out for themselves and not put themselves into harm's way but also train soldiers to look out for other people that may be inadvertently putting themselves in harm's way. So they teach them how to carefully approach a situation and defuse it. Sometimes a third party, that extra set of eyes that the potential victim may not be able to see. So your answer is yes, we're training people to be safer and we're training them to look out for each other and realistically that's how you start solving all of these problems is everyone becomes aware of looking out for eacb other.

Parnell defends timing of National Guard inquiry

Posted: April 30, 2014 - 12:07am

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE — Gov. Sean Parnell's call for a federal investigation of sexual misconduct within the Alaska National Guard came nearly four years after allegations first arose, but he said Monday that he could not act before getting specific details of allegations.

Parnell on Sunday was criticized in a newspaper column for the timing of his call for an investigation and responded to reporters' questions following a candidate debate in Anchorage, the Anchorage Daily News reported.

Early in his tenure, Parnell said halting assaults on women would be a focus of his administration.

Parnell said he met with National Guard chaplains in 2010 regarding the lack of the service's response to reports of sexual assault. However, he did not learn specifics until this year, he said.

"When the chaplains came to me in 2010, I listened to them, had a lengthy meeting with them, heard their concerns specifically on sexual assault, sexual misconduct, those charges that they were saying was occurring in the Guard," Parnell said. "They could only give me general allegations."

The chaplains were "under a duty of confidentiality," Parnell said.

Parnell spoke to the National Guard commander, Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, and learned some of the cases were years old and that allegations of criminal acts had been referred to police or Alaska State Troopers.

Parnell worked with Katkus to make sure a safe reporting mechanism was in place for sexual assault complaints, he said.

Parnell said he met with state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, on Feb. 26, and was given the name of a person in the National Guard who could give specific details on how the system was not working for victims. Parnell said he called the guard member within 24 hours and was told of two instances where the system had not worked.

"Within 24 hours of learning those specific details, I was writing a letter to the Guard Bureau, contacting them, saying please send a special investigator to review all of the cases that the guard has whether they are related to sexual misconduct, whether they are related to fraud," Parnell said. "Got right on it as soon as I had those specific details."

The letter asked for a federal investigation of sexual assault and fraud in the Alaska National Guard and an examination of how commanders handled reports of rape. Parnell announced the federal review in March.

The bureau's Office of Complex Investigations could complete a report by with recommendations by late summer or early fall, Parnell said.

"You can be sure if anything untoward is there or anything that raises concern relative to sexual assault victims or reporting or the command structure, that I will take action," Parnell said.

Gov. Parnell Says He Took Immediate Action On Sexual Assault Allegations

Governor Sean Parnell is defending his decision to wait four years to request a federal investigation into reports of a sexual assault problem in the Alaska National Guard. Anchorage Daily News columnist Shannyn Moore wrote Sunday that Parnell first learned about misconduct in the Guard in 2010, when he was approached by three guard chaplains. Parnell says he took those charges seriously, but lacked the details to prompt an investigation until February.

He says after the initial concerns were raised, he went to Major General Thomas Katkus to make sure the systems were in place to protect guard members. Then in February, Parnell says he was able to talk with a guard member who provided specifics.

Based on what you've heard from victims and others, how big of a problem do you tbink sexual assault is in the National Guard?

I think one allegation is too much and I take every allegation seriously, because I am concerned about Alaskans who suffer from sexual assault and violence. It's been a core part of who I am fighting for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. So, I take every assault allegation seriously. So, in 2010 when the chaplains first came to speak with me and they made allegations that sexual assault was occurring on Guard members I questioned them and asked for detail, and they could not provide it because they were under duty of confidentiality to the people they counseled, but immediately after that I took action and went right to the Guard, to the general, and asked him to talk to me about what he knew of sexual assaults occurring in the Guard. And he went through the cases that had been filed at that time; spoke about how any cases that involved allegations of criminal activity, as in sexual assault, are not only investigated but they are also referred to local law enforcement – like the Anchorage Police Department. And I made sure that for the safety of the victims and any future victims in the Guard that there was, and is, a reporting process that's safe for anybody in the Guard to utilize; that there's an investigation process that is complete and accurate and directed that appropriate penalties be assessed. Now, that's outside the criminal context, but the criminal context goes directly to law enforcement. I had only those general allegations of sexual assault, but I still took action to make sure that there was a system in place that works for victims of sexual assault.

Those general allegations persisted but they were the same allegations about events that occurred years ago. And then on Feb. 26th, Senator Dyson, came to me and said he had specific detail. Before when he spoke to me he had general allegations and he asked me to call a guard member who would provide me with specific detail about how the system wasn't working. I made that contact within 24 hours of Sen. Dyson's [call], personally spoke with a Guard member. That Guard member provided me with two instances where, if the allegations were substantiated, that the system would have failed our Guard member. And at that point, I realized I needed to get an independent assessment of the entire reporting and investigation structure. So I called in the National Guard Bureau, they have a complex investigation review team – I did that within 24 hours and that team is on the ground now in Alaska, doing their work to make sure that victims are safe.

Some people will think why was it four years? In hindsight do you wish you would have come forward four years ago, what do you think could have been done differently?

At the time I took immediate action to make sure that every victim of a sexual assault had been referred to law enforcement. I made sure that anyone who had concerns about what was happening in the Guard had a safe reporting structure, but without specific detail about how the system was otherwise failing, that's all I could do, is what I believed. And still believe that. But, on the other hand, once I got specific information about how the structure was actually failing, in other words the who, what, where, when why – the same thing you reporters ask – even though I pressed for that earlier and nobody could or would provide me with that, the second I got that kind of information I took immediate action with the National Guard Bureau to get them in there and get an independent look at what was happening.

Talk more about the specifics? What exactly were you needing for you to have that ability to actually ask for an investigation?

So, 4 years ago I was told there is a problem with sexual assault in the Guard. That is the sum and substance of what I was given. When I went to Guard leadership to inquire about that they said that yes they had specific instances where sexual assaults had been reported, that those had been referred to law enforcement for investigation, like the Anchorage Police Department. And they also detailed the reporting structure for any kind of alleged malfeasance in the Guard that was in place. And I had detailed for me, here's the list of cases that are pending; here's the list of cases that have been resolved in the past. But when it came specifically to the sexual assaults, when that kind of criminal activity was brought forward, that went immediately, as I was told, to law enforcement, which I think is appropriate.

One of the problems with sexual assault cases is there often isn't enough information and it's very difficult for victims to come forward. Did you consider that when you decided not to pursue an investigation earlier? What would you say to a victim of sexual assault about the statement that you didn't have enough specifics? Do you think that's enough of an answer for someone?

What I did is an internal state investigation. Meaning, I went in, my office went in and we made leadership tell us exactly what they were doing to protect sexual assault victims.

When I had an actual specific set of facts related to how the system had failed, or – in this case – was alleged to fail, I asked the National Guard Bureau, as an independent assessing body, to come in and look at what I had been told and also look at the entire system to make sure we protect our guard members.

The Choose Respect campaign has been a big focus for you. Are you concerned this will damage the momentum or image you're hoping to get across to Alaskans about coming forward when these things happen?

Well, absolutely. Anyone who knows me would say I care deeply about victims of sexual assault and domestic violence. And I'm more concerned than anything that victims may not come forward. Because I know from speaking with many across the state how difficult that already is, and I don't want to make that more difficult. That's why I launched the immediate investigation, even when I had the barest of details, and now that I have specific details, I've called in the National Guard Bureau to help because I think it's beyond us at this point.

When do you expect the investigation to conclude, when will you have a report and will you commit to releasing that report publicly?

I already have. I have made that commitment. The review team from the National Guard Bureau let me know they would be on the ground, in Alaska in the month of May. They said that it would take several months after that to complete the report and make that available to me. I already committed to making that report public, with the exception of any confidential victim information that should not be put forward, because I do want to protect the privacy of the victims. So, that's been my commitment and remains so.

You're still standing behind General Katkus. Do you have confidence in him? Do you wish he would have come to you sooner?

General Katkus has been very forthright. When I started asking questions about sexual assault cases, he came forward right away, showed me the cases that had been transferred to law enforcement, showed me how they have tracked cases, detailed how they investigate cases. And he's been very proactive about holding what the Guard calls "sensing sessions," meaning going into guard units and informing people about how to report acts of sexual harassment, acts of sexual violence. So General Katkus has been very proactive in that regard, and that's what I know at this point.

Do you think he could have done more within the Guard itself to make sure this behavior was not at all tolerated?

From what I know now, the answer is no. But again, I've asked the National Guard Bureau to come have that independent look to make sure our Guard members are safe. General Katkus has told me at every turn that's his desire and mission, he understands it, gets it and he has the systems in place that demonstrate that. I have asked the National Guard Bureau to make sure that those systems truly work for victims because we care deeply, and I care deeply, about protecting Alaskans.

Did you talk to anyone beyond General Katkus about the chaplains' concerns?

Yes, in fact, our office talked with numerous Guard members. All of which had the same general allegations. There was one victim who came forward and spoke with a member of my office. Her case was also being investigated by Anchorage Policed Department at that point in time, so the answer is yes, we spoke with a number of people.

Mike Nizich-yYour chief of staff- was using his personal e-mail account to correspond about this issuc. Wby was that?

I spoke with Mr. Nizich and understand that was at the request of the chaplains who wanted to go outside the official channels. However, I've asked Mr. Nizich to check his personal e-mail for that and his recollection is that it's one email. I've asked him to check for that and move it to the state account, which is protocol to follow. And that will be a part of the public record at that point.

McHugh Pierre was asking questions. Who asked him to bave the chaplains sign confidcntiality statements?

I don't know that but I do have a copy of what he apparently asked to be signed. It's a statement that was emailed to all Department of Military and Veterans Affairs employees. It says employees aren't authorized to give statements on behalf of department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, which is standard operating policy in any department or any business that you don't speak for the business, you don't speak for the department. without first coordinating it with your supervisor.

He also spoke with people on base about wanting to know how information was getting out. It almost feels a bit like a witch hunt. Does that concern you that oftentimes it takes people acting outside of the normal channels to get this information out and at the end of the day, that's the main mission, is it not?

Well that's true and that's why I asked these questions. Again, there's nothing that stops the employee, as long as they're not speaking on behalf of the department. In other words they're speaking as a person, as an Alaskan who's concerned, that's not what this statement addresses though.

But the chaplains weren't' saying they were speaking for the department, they were raising concerns about people who were alleging sexual assault.

And I don't condone the activity you just described. I do, on the other hand, understand when supervisors are asking their employees not to represent the department in certain things. In this case, I don't have all the facts, but I don't condone trying to stop what you're describing.

So you're saying you wouldn't condone McHugh Pierre asking them to he quiet?

No. But again, I don't have evidence is that's what he did. What I evidence is that he asked them not to speak on behalf of the department without coordinating that with a supervisor.

What have you taken away from this process? Do you think there are changes that need to be made? Are you frustrated by tbe process are tbere things that need to be done differently?

I am frustrated when Alaskans in the Guard don't feel like they are protected; that's entirely frustrating. And it's frustrating to me when I don't have enough information to take action beyond what I did. In other words, I took action, I made sure that the systems were in place to protect Guard members; and that the people were in place, like an independent investigator – a safe route for people to report, but until the end of February, until then I didn't have verified facts that alerted me I needed to bring the National Guard Bureau in. So, I do get frustrated when Alaskans are reporting harm and are continuing to report harm, even though, from all appearances, the system is in place and the checks and balances are in place to assure their safety -- including referrals to law enforcement agencies. So if indeed we find there is wrongdoing, I 'll take steps to punish that and make it right, there's no question about that.

Sexual Assault Response
Alaska National Guard
Key Messages and Talking Points

Media Interview
Lori Townsend
APRN

Pursuing Justice. We do not have an independent criminal justice system in the National Guard and we are not subject to the provisions of the federal uniformed code of military justice (UCMJ). We report crimes to local civilian law enforcement.

We have opportunities to respond to allegations administratively through personnel actions that may affect the future career of a perpetrator, but there are lengthy processes as we follow regulations for due process. We do all that we can to ensure victims are protected and perpetrators see consequences to their actions.

Victim Reporting. Victims decide if they want to report their assault to a sexual assault response coordinator or a victim advocate. We have 3 sexual assault response coordinators and 42 victim advocates in the Alaska National Guard.

Victim Assistance. They provide assistance to victims. In 70% of reported assaults in the last 5 years, the perpetrator was a civilian member of the community, not a National Guard member. We want to help members of our organization who have been harmed, and we offer assistance and resources that a large majority of civilian organizations do not offer to their employees in-house.

Our Rates vs. Alaska's Rates. There have been 11 reported sexual assaults with National Guard members as the perpetrator in the past 5 years. We have 4,000 people in our organization and an average of 2 assaults by National Guard members per year over a five-year timeframe. One assault is one too many. But our organization has a much smaller percentage of reported assaults than the percentages reported by Alaska citizens as a whole, where we are challenged with one of the highest sexual assault rates in the nation.

RECAP: Summary of Numbers for Reported Cases. There have been 37 reported cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009. In 26 of those cases, the alleged perpetrator was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard. We have 11 reports in the past 5 years where the alleged perpetrator was a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Reports.

Year: Total Number of Reported Cases (Restricted and Unrestricted)

2014: 1 (Unrestricted, 1 not in the AKNG)

2013: 11 (8 were unrestricted; 5 not in the AKNG)

2012: 3 (2 unrestricted; all 3 not in AKNG)

2011: 12 (10 unrestricted; 11 not in the AKNG)

2010: 6 (5 unrestricted; all 5 not in the AKNG)

2009: 4 (2 unrestricted; 1 not in the AKNG)

All unrestricted cases were referred to law enforcement.

Chaplains assertions. All of the victims who sought support from our chaplains also reported their assaults and have received or declined assistance from our sexual assault response program.

Law enforcement. None of the unrestricted cases that were referred to local law enforcement have been prosecuted to date. You may contact law enforcement directly if you have questions about referred cases.

Parnell responds to his handling of allegations of sexual abuse in the Guard

After a candidate forum on Monday, Gov. Sean Parnell answered questions about his administration's handling of allegations of sexual abuse in Alaska's National Guard, something that appears to have plagued the Guard for years. The problems in the Guard were reported in the media last October, and were revisited in a Sunday column by Shannyn Moore. More is likely to be revealed about the issue. For now, however, below are the allegations that I questioned Parnell about, followed by his response.

- Allegation: Parnell waited for four years to act on allegations of a widespread culture of abuse in the Guard. In 2010, three chaplains had a meeting with Parnell to discuss the culture. Republican Sen. Fred Dyson called on Parnell three times to take action. However, it wasn't until March 2014 that Parnell called on the federal government to conduct an official investigation into the allegations.
- Response: Parnell said that the allegations lacked the specificity that he needed to take action. He said he met with now Adjutant General Thomas Katkus about the issue. He said he reviewed charts and spreadsheets that documented the allegations, and saw that the appropriate ones had been referred to the Anchorage Police Department and the troopers. On February 26, Republican Sen. Fred Dyson brought forth a "specific person who was able to make specific claims about what went wrong," Parnell said. Parnell himself talked to this person, and within 24 hours, called on the feds. That investigation is expected to be complete in May. A report will follow likely sometime late summer.

- Allegation: Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, tried to get a sexual assault investigator to stay quiet and not talk to legislators about the issues in the Guard by having her sign a letter saying she wouldn't do so. He then tried to get the Guard chaplains to sign the same letter.
- Response: Parnell said that he was "surprised' by the accusation. But when he looked into it, it was "less nefarious than what had been reported," he said. Indeed, the letter in question, which you can read here, is one that went to other department employees. It says that employees should not give official statements without prior authorizations, and that although, according to the letter, "the mandate does not mean that an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation," such contact had to take place during personal time using personal resources.

Finally, Moore reported that Mike Nizich, Parnell's chief of staff, was using his personal email to correspond with the chaplains about the issues in the Guard. Personal emails are not subject to public information requests. Parnell said that if those emails were about state business, they should be forwarded to Nizich's state account and will direct him to do so.

On Feb. 28, 2014, our governor, Sean Parnell, wrote a letter asking the Department of Defense to investigate "reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

He explained that he was compelled to request the investigation by "information I recently learned."

That was not true. In fact, it was very far from the truth.

Military officers had risked their careers to tell the governor personally that female soldiers had been sexually assaulted by other Guard members and that those assaults were not only not investigated, they were covered up by senior officers.

And when did the governor really learn about this misconduct?

In 2010, four years before he finally decided somebody needed to do something about the pirate ship that was his National Guard.

Here's some of what happened, taken from the accounts of people directly involved:

In 2010, several of the victims of sexual assault and misconduct were distraught and frustrated by the Guard leadership's unwillingness to investigate their complaints and protect them from retribution by victimizers. Eventually, in desperation, they took their stories to their military chaplains. Three chaplains, convinced that they could not trust senior officers of the Guard to respond appropriately, selflessly decided to take their concerns over the heads of those officers directly to the governor.

The chaplains were able to connect with the governor because, in addition to his military duties, one of them had also worked in administration for the Grace Christian Church school, which Parnell's daughters had attended. Using that connection, he was able to arrange a phone appointment with Parnell.

On Nov. 18, 2010, the chaplains -- a major and two lieutenant colonels -- gathered in a church office for their telephone conference with the governor. The chaplains, all feeling personally uncomfortable and professionally at risk for going outside the chain of command, told Parnell, their commander in chief, what they thought he needed to know about the widespread lack of trust in senior Guard leadership, the mishandling of sexual assault complaints and the misuse of Guard funds and resources. The call lasted 20 minutes.

Parnell thanked them for their courage.

Less than two weeks later, on Nov. 30, 2010, several Air National Guardsmen sent a complaint to the governor asking him to "accept the resignation of Major Gen. Thomas Katkus because of 'multiple acts of moral turpitude' he had allowed to run rampant, including drug trafficking, sexual assaults/rape, illegal use of aircraft."

Katkus, who has since been promoted by Parnell to adjutant general of the Alaska Guard, is a member of the governor's Cabinet.

Col. Robert Doehl, a former vice commander of the Alaska Air National Guard's 176th wing, now works for Sen. Mark Begich, D-Alaska, as a special assistant for military and veterans' affairs.

On Dec. 3, 2010, Doehl wrote a seven-page letter to the governor. He thanked Parnell for a meeting they'd had that same day.

Doehl went on to repeat and document allegations about the Guard that he had shared with Parnell in their meeting. The allegations included abuse of authority, safety shortcuts that had resulted in loss of life and aircraft, cover-ups, cronyism and retaliation against whistleblowers. He named names, specifically accusing Lt. Gen. Craig Campbell (he became lieutenant governor in August 2009) and then-Maj. Gen. Katkus of failing to stop the misconduct.

That meeting also included the chaplains, the major and the lieutenant colonels, along with several other officers. By that time, several female soldier rape victims had submitted written statements to the Governor's Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Katie Tepas, according to one of the chaplains. Your office already has those statements, the officers told Parnell. Tepas had also met with some of the victims, who told her their stories in person, according to two officers who heard it from the victims directly.

Karl Hansen, a former special agent with the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division and a former member of security details for Defense Secretaries Donald Rumsfeld and Robert Gates, is now the medical ombudsman at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. In that role, he has dealt extensively with the Guard sexual assault victims. Hansen said one of the victims told him that Tepas had asked why she, the victim, didn't like Katkus and what she thought of the governor. The meeting led nowhere. There was no investigation.

During my conversation with him, I asked Hansen what he thought of Parnell's "Choose Respect" campaign against sexual and domestic violence. He said, "The victims I've talked to feel it's just lip service. I'm dealing with women who are suicidal because of what has happened to them -- some attempting multiple times."

On Dec. 29, 2011, the lieutenant colonels spoke by phone with Parnell's chief of staff, Mike Nizich. Nizich had been present for other discussions and was the designated contact person for the chaplains. Nizich said he would convey their concerns to the governor. The chaplains stayed in touch with Nizich -- through Nizich's personal email, not his state email -- over the following months.

By early fall of 2013, state Sen. Fred Dyson, R-Eagle River, had been briefed on the allegations about the Guard. He knew one of the chaplains through their service together on a community board. Dyson said he went to the governor with information about the pervasive climate of "boys will be boys" and the "circling of the wagons" around alleged perpetrators in the Guard.

"It appeared to me that the governor was not giving enough credibility to the information the chaplains were giving him," Dyson told me.

In October 2013, reporter Sean Cockerham wrote a story about the sexual assault allegations for the Daily News. Cockerham reported that Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a member of the Guard and a former Anchorage police officer, had been appointed to investigate the charges of sexual misconduct. (I'm told she was appointed by Brig. Gen. Catherine Jorgensen.)

The chaplains were asking why it had taken so long. It had been three years since they first told the governor what had happened to some women in the Guard.

After the Cockerham story appeared, Dyson went to the governor a second time, encouraging him to take an active role in addressing the chaplains' concerns. "The question of the propriety of the chaplains in speaking to the media came up," Dyson said. He meant the governor didn't like the fact they had talked to a reporter.

On Dec. 6, 2013, Parnell's deputy commissioner of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, McHugh Pierre, summoned Lt. Col. Wawersik, the sexual assault investigator, to his office on JBER. He wanted to know if she had been giving information to Dyson. Wawersik told him she had not.

On Dec. 9, Pierre called two of the chaplains to his office. After asking which lawmakers they had talked to, Pierre asked them to sign a letter stating that they would not talk to legislators. Both declined, saying they would first have to consult an attorney. They were not allowed to take a copy of Pierre's letter with them.

The next day, their attorney, Wayne Anthony Ross of Anchorage, wrote to Pierre asking for a copy of the document. He also asked Pierre to explain the "established guidelines" he had referenced in his discussion with the two chaplains.

As of Friday, almost five months after he wrote Pierre, Ross had not received a reply, he told me.

In February 2014, Dyson contacted the governor a third time and again strongly encouraged him to act. Two weeks later the governor requested a federal investigation.

When I asked Dyson why he thought it had taken so long for the governor to do something, he said, "He was too loyal to his people" and he "lacked a healthy skepticism."

I think that's a charitable analysis. I'll just say it doesn't suggest the governor had an excess of concern for sexual assault victims, or the need for a functional National Guard.

Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, has been asking some of the same questions I have about these events. This past Friday, when I emailed the governor's office asking to talk to Parnell about the Guard, his spokeswoman sent me a copy of a letter the governor had just sent to French.

In the letter, Parnell suggested it wasn't possible for him to have followed up on the chaplains' sexual assault information. He posed this question to French:

"Did the chaplains also tell you they were unable to state case-specific detail with our office to substantiate their concerns because of their duty of confidentiality to the individuals they counseled?"

The governor conveniently overlooks the fact that the sexual assaults had been reported earlier within the chain of command. Presumably all Parnell would have had to do was ask the nearest general to get him the names and allegations of all the Guard soldiers who had reported being raped in the last few years. And if that didn't work, his office already had the victims' statements, and someone there had talked to victims.

Parnell's letter continued: "Even without detail specific enough to pinpoint a victim willing to report, nor a perpetrator, we made sure through the Adjutant General that Guard members had a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations would be taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including any appropriate penalties. Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referral to the appropriate law enforcement agency."

And who was the Adjutant General who would ensure the safety and proper treatment of victims and the prosecution of perpetrators?

Thomas Katkus, of course.

Both of Alaska's U.S. senators, Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski, responded relatively quickly to the public allegations. Sean Parnell, the commander in chief of the Alaska Guard, waited nearly four years.

In the meantime, the victims suffered and the pirate ship sailed on.

Question: How many reports of sexual misconduct per year has the AK Guard seen as a whole each of last five years?

Our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Octavia Thompson, only tracks sexual assaults that are reported to her. There are several facets of sexual misconduct that don't rise to the level of sexual assault, things such as fraternization or sexual harassment, of which she does not track.

In addition, a victim may choose to file an unrestricted report or restricted report. If a victim chooses unrestricted reporting, it gives victim advocates permission to notify the victim's command and local law enforcement. Unrestricted reporting also gives us the opportunity to ensure offenders are disciplined to the full extent of our means.

Also, keep in mind that a victim can report a sexual assault to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, but his/her perpetrator does not have to be a member of the Alaska National Guard. We will still provide the victims with resources and assistance.

For unrestricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Unrestricted Reporting Cases
2014: 1 (This case has an alleged perpetrator who is NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2013: 8 (3 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 10 (All 10 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2

All of these cases were referred to local law enforcement.

Please note the broad military definition referenced below on sexual assault. The 2005 Defense Task Force on Sexual Harassment and Violence at the Military Service Academies report states:

> "Within the military community, the term sexual assault carries a more far-reaching meaning that encompasses everything from violent sexual acts such as rape, forcible sodomy, and assault with intent to commit rape or sodomy, to indecent assault. While indecent assault connotes violence, violence is not a prerequisite of the crime. Indecent assault can be a mere sexual touching that occurs without the consent of the person who is touched.

If a victim chooses to file a restricted report, we can only share information to the extent in which the victim gives permission. There could be instances in which a victim reports a sexual assault to a victim advocate, chaplain, medical personnel or the VA and chooses not to meet with the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Also, when a victim chooses to file a restricted report, their information is not shared with law enforcement or Guard leadership and is kept confidential. Law enforcement is only contacted when a victim files an unrestricted report.

For restricted reports of sexual assaults, the breakdown is as follows (keep in mind that some assaults happened prior to the time frame they were reported in):

*As of April 14, 2014
Year Reported: Number of Restricted Reporting Cases
2014: 0
2013: 3 (2 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2012: 1 (This case had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2011: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2010: 5 (All 5 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)
2009: 2 (1 of these cases had an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard)

In summary, 37 cases of alleged sexual assault since 2009 reported to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator:

Year: Total Number of Reported Cases (Restricted and Unrestricted)
2014: 1
2013: 11
2012: 3
2011: 12
2010: 6
2009: 4

Of those 37 cases, when the alleged sexual assault occurred, 26 cases involved an alleged perpetrator who was NOT a member of the Alaska National Guard.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed an unrestricted report in 24 cases.

Of those 37 cases, the victim filed a restricted report in 13 cases.

Gov. Parnell Asking For Investigation National Guard Sexual Assaults

Governor Parnell is asking the federal National Guard Bureau to investigate cases of sexual assault in Alaska's National Guard. In a press release, Parnell wrote he is "deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard."

The investigation follows a story from the Anchorage Daily News last October where alleged victims of sexual assault described an extensive problem in Alaska's National Guard.

Sean Cockerham is a reporter with McClatchy Newspapers Washington Bureau. He broke that story and is reporting on the investigation. He says he began hearing about problems in the Guard last year.

KTUU says Parnell's office this week released a Feb. 28 letter to National Guard Bureau chief Gen. Frank Grass that asks for an investigator to be appointed to examine open and closed investigations of alleged sexual assault.

Parnell spokeswoman, Sharon Leighow, says Grass quickly responded, and Parnell met last week with officials, including Col. Christian Rofrano, the chief counsel of the National Guard Bureau. Leighow says the scope of an investigation was discussed.

Alaska National Guard officials have said 29 cases of sexual assault have been reported since 2009. Of those, 21 were closed or suspended after law enforcement got involved.

Subject: more questions

Good morning, Sean,

Your questions and my answers are below. Please let me know if you need anything else.

Sincerely,

Candis

QUESTION:
I understand some things are not releasable, but I'd like to request at least a synopsis of what each of these soldiers is specifically alleged to have done. Also, are you saying the names of the soldiers involved will never be released? I'd like to renew my request for the names, or at least the ranks.

ANSWER:
Because these are personnel/administrative investigations (not criminal investigations), we are limited by regulation about what we can release. If we were to release some of what you are asking for, it could invalidate separation board proceedings and negatively impact our ability to pursue justice.

Allegations include a range of misconduct, from fraternization to misuse of government equipment.

Not every investigation was in response to victims coming forward and seeking assistance. In some cases, supervisors or commanders were notified of possible behaviors, and the commander pursued an inquiry (internal administrative investigation). In other cases, victims initiated a restricted report, which does not give permission for the organization to refer the case to law enforcement. And in some cases, the victim initiated an unrestricted report.

If law enforcement is unable to pursue the case due to lack of evidence, lack of cooperation by the victim, or a variety of other reasons, the adjutant general may request that the National Guard Bureau Office of Complex Investigations (NGB/OCI) pursue an investigation. A secondary option is the administrative internal investigation to root out more details of the alleged activity.

QUESTION:
Will the charges for these soldiers be referred to law enforcement for possible criminal prosecution?

ANSWER:
It is always our practice to turn over all allegations of a criminal nature to local law enforcement.

Four of the cases were already referred to local law enforcement, and local law enforcement did not pursue the cases.

One of those four cases was referred to NGB/OCI, was investigated, and is still in process.

The other eight of the 12 investigations were initiated in order to look into allegations that did not indicate or claim actual criminal behavior—although such investigations may discover possible criminal behavior—or the victim chose not to report or pursue assistance from local law enforcement or cooperate with law enforcement.

To all DMVA employees:

We are about to turn the clock on a new year and 2014 will certainly be exciting!

There are many candidates for political office and many of them keep the Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs as a high priority. This can affect our department in many ways, one of which can lead to candidates contacting employees to get an official statement outside of the chain of command.

Employees are not authorized to give statements on behalf of the department without first coordinating the request with one's supervisor, and the Commissioner/ Adjutant General's office.

Our goal is to maintain the utmost professionalism in the workplace and the community, and this is one step to ensure we will be successful.

This mandate does not mean an employee cannot reach out to one's legislator to address a personal situation. But the employee must make this contact during non-business hours with personal resources.

I look forward to a successful 2014 and I wish everyone a Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays!

Alaska National Guard unit being investigated for allegations of sexual misconduct

By Sean Cockerham
McClatchy Washington Bureau
Published: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 3:00 am
Last Modified: Sunday, Oct. 27, 2013 - 7:29 pm

WASHINGTON -- Current and former members of the Alaska National Guard say there's serious sexual misconduct within the ranks and an investigation of recruiters accused of rape is now underway.

Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik, a former Anchorage police officer, is investigating allegations of sexual assault as well as other offenses, such as inappropriate relationships with new recruits, by members of the Alaska Army Guard's recruiting and retention unit headquartered at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. Members of the guard said other soldiers are also under investigation.

Sgt. Rosa Ralls, a currently serving member of the Alaska National Guard who reported being raped in 2009 by a former member of the military, said the sexual assault problem is severe.

"It's horrible, it really is," she said.

Lt. Col. Rick Koch, the state command chaplain for the Alaska National Guard, and Lt. Col. Ted McGovern, a chaplain in the Alaska Army National Guard, questioned why it's taken so long for action.

The two chaplains said sexual assault victims have been coming to them for years, and that the majority were assaulted by fellow guard members. The chaplains said victims don't trust their commanders to help because of a history of mishandled complaints, in which victims felt that nothing was being done.

"There were lots of bread crumbs on the trail that were never taken seriously. It was almost shocking to think that somebody wouldn't try to bore down deeper than they did," Koch said.

Maj. Gen. Tom Katkus, who has led the Alaska National Guard since 2009 as the adjutant general, confirmed "we do have some investigations going on." He said he could not discuss the details.

Katkus said the guard investigates all allegations of sexual misconduct.

"The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability," the general said in a written response to questions.

The military is grappling with a nationwide sexual assault crisis. The Pentagon reported a 35 percent increase over two years in the estimated number of military personnel victimized by sexual assault and related crimes. Sexual misconduct is already an issue in Alaska, where the commander of the Army National Guard's 49th Missile Defense battalion at Fort Greely was suspended this summer following complaints that he condoned affairs.

The Alaska National Guard is part of the state's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs. There are 1,905 members of the Army guard and another 2,029 serving in the air guard

Katkus said the federal National Guard Bureau has helped every state as the Department of Defense gained an understanding of the magnitude of the problem across the country.

The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator, he said, while it used to have to rely on its senior officers to investigate.

Chaplains Koch and McGovern said the administration of Alaska Gov. Sean Parnell, who oversees the Alaska National Guard, was told of sexual assault problems as far back as fall 2010.

The chaplains also said sexual harassment is pervasive in the Alaska guard and that the culture needs to change. "I would imagine every female in our organization has at least been harassed," Koch said.

The chaplains said some of the victims came to them through Lt. Col. Ken Blalock. Blalock said the first sexual assault victim, a subordinate, came to him around four years ago for help.

He said others soon followed after word got around that he would help them.

"I've had 15 sexual assault victims come to me," said Blalock, who is no longer in the National Guard.

Blalock said he brought sexual assault victims to the Anchorage police and the governor's office but nothing came of it except he got in trouble with his chain of command.

"I reported to police and the next thing I know I was getting my butt chewed by Gen. Katkus for daring to go outside of the chain of command with this stuff," Blalock said. "If a guardsman goes and robs a bank you call the police, you don't call the general."

Katkus said multiple agencies have looked into allegations by Blalock and "so far they haven't been able to substantiate too much."

In his written response to questions, Katkus said National Guard investigators pass information to law enforcement immediately when they became aware of possible criminal activity.

Katkus, a member of the governor's Cabinet as commissioner of Alaska's Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs, was an officer in the Anchorage Police Department for more than 20 years.

He said that as a police officer he was learned firsthand to the impact that sexual assault has on victims and the community, and that he is committed to protecting members of the guard.

"It is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors," he said.

Lt. Col. Wawersik's investigation began in December and focuses on multiple members of the guard's recruiting unit. Wawersik declined to comment when reached by McClatchy.

Court filings show that this summer Wawersik sought and obtained a 20-day protective order against one of the soldiers, Master Sgt. John Nieves, who was a recruiting commander before being reassigned.

Wawersik wrote in the court filings that she was afraid Nieves would hurt or kill her.

"Nieves is a subject of a military investigation I am conducting regarding recruiter misconduct with recruits. . . . As a result of my investigation Nieves stands to lose his 20 year career and be publicly humiliated," she wrote.

Nieves told his counselor at Fort Richardson that "he has a specific plan in mind to harm me," Wawersik wrote in her petition for the protective order. The counselor took the threat seriously and contacted Wawersik to warn her, the petition said.

Wawersik also wrote that the Anchorage Police Department was conducting an undercover investigation "regarding Nieves offering an individual money to harm a witness in my investigation."

Police consider Nieves dangerous and advised her to get the protective order, Wawersik wrote. She added that, even as a former 10-year police officer, she had "never felt more in fear for her life."

Nieves has not been charged with any crime. He said at a July court hearing that the alleged threat against Wawersik was an overreaction. "It was a counselor, somebody I confide in with my issues, it just happened to be that day I was upset. . . . No woman should be under any threat. Period. I am sorry," Nieves said, according to an audio recording of the court hearing.

The judge declined to issue a long-term protective order.

Nieves, reached for comment last week, said he's never committed sexual assault and did not seek to harm any witness.

He said he is awaiting the conclusion of the National Guard's investigation.

"I haven't been charged with anything, just told that I'm being investigated for basically sexual misconduct. And that's it, that's all I know," he said.

Nieves said he couldn't discuss details while the investigation is ongoing.

"I wish I could, honestly, I do want to talk about it. . . . I haven't had any chance to clear my name at all."

The guard's problems have attracted the attention of Alaska's congressional delegation. Sen. Mark Begich said he started hearing last year from constituents about misconduct in the organization.

"We were getting such a frequency from a variety of sources that it told us there is something going on there," Begich said.

Begich said his inquiries led to a National Guard Bureau review of the Alaska Guard. While it didn't tackle the scope of the sexual assault issue, Begich said he thinks it triggered a broader review.

Sexual assault numbers are problematic, as it's a crime that's often unreported. Gen. Katkus said there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported since 2009 to the Alaska Army and Air National Guard's sexual assault response coordinator.

The alleged perpetrators were members of the military in 11 of the cases and civilians in the rest of them, according to Katkus.

In some cases the victim did not want the attack known. But most of the reports were referred for investigation to local law enforcement, he said, such as Anchorage police or state troopers.

Katkus said he is not aware of any prosecutions resulting from the cases.

Anchorage police offered little explanation in response to a series of questions from McClatchy, other than to say that its special victims unit works closely with the National Guard.

"The Anchorage Police Department has made targeting the problem of sexual assault in our community a priority, and each report of sexual assault submitted to APD is reviewed and investigated based on its individual circumstances and merit, regardless of suspect or victim affiliations," said spokeswoman Dani Myren.

National Guard Sgt. Ralls said she told the Anchorage police and National Guard about her rape in 2009, but never found justice.

"I have no trust for either organization," Ralls said.

Ralls obtained her police report and provided a copy to McClatchy. It shows the Anchorage Police Department investigated the alleged rape. But the last entry, which was from 2011, said the case was suspended awaiting analysis of a DNA sample from her alleged attacker. Anchorage police did not respond to an inquiry about the status of her case.

Ralls said she believes her attacker slipped something in her drink. Melissa Jones, who said she was raped while in the Alaska National Guard in 2007, also said she thinks she was drugged.

Jones said she told her guard supervisors about the rape and was then confronted by her fellow soldiers with rumors, including that she'd been gang raped by the entire F Company.

Jones, who does not know who raped her, said the guard gave her no help.

Jones said she left Alaska but was traumatized by what happened, started cutting herself, and at one point attempted suicide.

"I am extremely angry," she said.

Sean,

Thank you for the opportunity to give input prior to the publishing of your story on my department. I would like to state my position right up front so you get an accurate understanding on my attitude towards this issue. As Commissioner for the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs and Adjutant General for the Alaska National Guard, it is my non-negotiable responsibility to ensure that every member of this organization root out any and all harassment, hostile work environment, sexual assault, or trading of sexual favors. Unequivocally, these actions simply have no place in any American work environment.

As both a state and federal entity, we treat such complaints with the utmost sensitivity and follow the clearly established checklist procedure in initiating the appropriate action. As DoD gained an understanding of the magnitude and impact of this problem, we have been extremely fortunate that the National Guard Bureau has provided important resourcing to every state, territory, and District of Columbia. The Alaska National Guard now has a trained sexual assault investigator on staff. Prior to this vital resource as a part of our inventory, we relied on our senior Officers to conduct military investigations. If any of these investigations developed the elements of a crime, the case was immediately passed to local law enforcement and/or the Army's Criminal Investigative Division (CID).

Since 2009 there have been 29 cases of alleged sexual assault reported from the Air and Army National Guard to our Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Our leadership and investigating officers are trained to coordinate with CID and local law enforcement immediately when they become aware that a crime may have been committed. Out of the above mentioned 29 cases, the victim chose to restrict reporting in 11 of those cases. Of the 29 cases, 18 had civilian perpetrators and 11 were military. Local law enforcement, such as Anchorage Police Department or the Alaska State Troopers were contacted in approximately 21 cases, and for specific reasons, APD/AST did not open an investigation.

During the course of military investigations, if our investigators become aware of possible criminal behavior, immediate contact and consultation begins with local law enforcement and/or CID. Those that do not rise to the level of criminal activity are addressed by command in accordance with established military policies and regulations.

I cannot confirm or deny the names of any individuals under investigation, according to Department of Defense personnel policy. Any person under investigation has the right to privacy and the right to due process. I cannot comment on the status of any ongoing investigation. However, in the interest of good order and discipline, we take appropriate action to investigate any and all allegations while ensuring the safety and security of possible victims while simultaneously protecting the rights of anyone suspected of inappropriate behavior.

The Alaska National Guard will do everything appropriate to protect our women and men from sexual assault, and those who would attack their dignity and honor. We are focusing efforts on prevention, victim support, investigations, and accountability. Sexual assault and harassment is inconsistent with our values and it erodes trust and confidence. When an allegation is substantiated, we deal with it within the full measure of applicable policy, regulation, and law.

As you may know, I have been a Traditional Alaskan National Guardsman for over 37 years. I spent 21.5 years serving as a full time police officer with the Municipality of Anchorage in a wide range of assignments and eventually retired in 2000 as the Captain of the Resource Division. During my very active career with the Anchorage Police Department, I was exposed first-hand to the effect that sexual assault has on a person and our community. I spent my entire first full-time career under sworn oath as a Police Officer to keep Anchorage safe. Now, still under sworn oath as a federally recognized officer in the US military, I continue work to ensure every one of our Alaska National Guardsmen and our state work force have a secure work environment free from any harassment or abuse.

Is that correct?

What prompted the investigation and when did it begin?

What are the names and ranks of the soldiers who are under investigation?

What, if any, action has the guard taken against them?

When will the investigation be concluded?

Is there any indication that members of the recruiting and retention unit were also involved in dealing drugs?

Setting the record straight for Alaskans
April 28, 2014
By Governor Sean Parnell

In response to a recent opinion piece (Sunday, April 27) regarding the Alaska National Guard that was full of false statements and inferences designed to mislead readers, I am compelled to set the record straight.

First and foremost, the author's claim that I did nothing when first hearing the concerns from National Guard chaplains about sexual assault complaints is utterly false.

Since my days in the state Legislature to my time as governor, my top priority has been to eliminate sexual assault and domestic violence in Alaska, including the military.

The chaplains provided general information to me that sexual assaults were occurring in the Guard, but because of their duty of confidentiality to the people they counsel, the chaplains could not disclose names of victims, perpetrators, or specific circumstances.

Nevertheless, even without specific enough details to pinpoint a victim or case, I went to Adjutant General Tom Katkus, requesting information regarding what the chaplains had told me. I made sure through Gen. Katkus that Guard members have a safe route to report sexual misconduct, and that their allegations are taken seriously and investigated to conclusion, including appropriate penalties.

Where criminal conduct was alleged, we directed referrals to the appropriate law enforcement agency, such as the Anchorage Police Department.

Further, the opinion piece asserts that Sen. Fred Dyson came to me a number of times with concerns about what he heard from the same chaplains. During Sen. Dyson's visit with me last fall, he too had only general allegations. On Feb. 26, 2014, Sen. Dyson gave me the name of a Guard member who was willing to provide specific detail.

Within 24 hours of that meeting, I personally phoned the person named by Sen. Dyson. In that call, I learned of specific, but unverified allegations, causing me to question the existing reporting and investigation process.

Two days later, within a day of getting specific details about the reporting system – not two weeks, as the columnist claims – I sent my request to General Grass, chief of the National Guard Bureau, for a review of all open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among Alaska National Guard members.

The National Guard Bureau responded quickly, and currently has a team in Alaska conducting the review.

The columnist's claim that our administration had enough specifics to act on before 2014 is based on two instances: First, the writer alleges that Katie TePas of my office

RE: Request for Investigator, Office of Complex Administrative Investigations

Dear General Grass,

I request the detailing of a CNGB Complex Investigation Program Investigator to investigate open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard. I request that you issue a detailed memorandum allowing the investigator to act under my authority to gain access to State personnel and records to the extent allowed under State law and regulation.

I am extremely proud of our Alaska National Guard members and their professionalism in carrying out their duties. However, I remain deeply concerned by reports of sexual assaults and other behavior creating a hostile environment and culture within portions of the Alaska National Guard. Not only are individuals victimized and traumatized in these circumstances, but collectively our National Guard is harmed – from morale to mission damage.

In recent years, Adjutant General Thomas Katkus has emphasized strong systems for reporting, investigating, and tracking such cases; and he has raised awareness among Guard members to these issues through "sensing" sessions. Information I recently learned, however, compels me to write and seek an outside look at our Alaska National Guard's training, reporting, investigations, and case dispensation practices related to the areas I outlined above. Where a number of matters were referred to civilian law enforcement who declined to investigate, I ask you to review those matters, as well. In my estimation, the review should include the National Guard's command structure and its responses to these cases, up to and including TAG.

I am willing to meet with your investigator, along with my Chief of Staff, Mike Nizich, in order to assist in planning and conducting the investigation. I have directed my Chief of Staff to ensure your investigator receives the full cooperation of State National Guard personnel. I have directed my

Attorney General, Michael Geraghty, to provide legal advice as necessary. When the investigation is complete, I will make myself or my designee available for an Out-Brief with the investigator. Your investigator will receive full cooperation from all units, guardsmen and women, and civilians within the Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs who are under my authority. If your investigator receives resistance in regard to the investigation from any individual under my authority, please have your investigator contact my Chief of Staff or my Deputy Chief of Staff, Cindy Sims.

Your investigator's point of contact is Chief of Staff Mike Nizich at 907-465-3500 or Deputy Chief Cindy Sims at 907-269-7450. They will provide cell numbers once initial contact has been made.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell

MAY 2 1 2014

Dear Senator Murkowski:

This is in response to your letter dated June 19, 2013, regarding allegations that the command climate within the Alaska National Guard (AKNG) is not conducive to reporting and investigating sexual assaults and that, in some instances, officials may have taken steps to cover up incidents of sexual assault.

Our letter of July 18, 2013, indicated that the DoD Hotline referred the allegations to the Department of the Army Inspector General (Army IG) for action (case number 20130620-014429). Our letter of March 6, 2014, indicated that officials within the Directorate for Investigations of Senior Officials (ISO) opened case number 20130715-014791-CASE-01 to monitor the senior official investigation by the Army IG.

On April 15, 2014, the Army IG completed the investigation and forwarded the Report of Investigation to ISO officials for review. The Army IG investigation found AKNG command climate sensing sessions did not identify concerns regarding sexual assault or sexual harassment reporting, and that The Adjutant General (TAG), AKNG, and other AKNG officials did not cover up any reported sexual assault incidents.

The Army IG report noted the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, AKNG, received reports of 11 alleged sexual assault incidents (since February 2012) and promptly coordinated referrals of all incidents to Alaska law enforcement authorities. Alaska State Statute, "Military Code of Alaska," Section 26.05, dictates that Alaska state civilian law enforcement authorities investigate, and the Alaska civilian criminal system prosecute, cases involving AKNG member suspects. The TAG took adverse administrative action on the only two cases upon which he could act; those which substantiated sexual assault allegations against AKNG members. In one case, the TAG discharged the subject from the AKNG, and in the other, he initiated the subject's separation.

On May 6, 2014, ISO Oversight Branch officials completed a review of the Army IG investigation and concurred with the findings and conclusions.

Should you have questions, please contact me at 703-604-8324.

You're kidding me, right? Of the four politicians I wrote, your office is the ONLY one who never responded. Then when you do, I get the Lois Lerner "Oh, our computer screwed up" excuse. No, the issue is not resolved. His separation board was BOI/PR and he is STILL in the guard. I am very interested to see what was in the NGB OCI's report, IF it ever becomes public. I would love to speak about this ongoing issue over the phone, as in email it would be far too long of a conversation. Please have someone from your office, preferably someone who can give me answers, call me at BOI/PR .

I have served my country for the past BOI/PR years, the first BOI/PR as an active duty soldier based at BOI/PR, and the last BOI/PR as an Alaska Army National Guardsman based out of BOI/PR. Over these past BOI/PR years, I have not only been through, but excelled through countless trials and tribulations the vast populous can never begin to imagine. I completed one tour in BOI... in BOI/PR, where I saw my brethren permanently scarred and disfigured. I completed some of the Army's toughest, most demanding training in some of the harshest climates. I missed my first-born child's first birthday. My knees cause me constant pain from the countless miles of running and ruck marching. My left hip pops every time I move it, causing pain from the IED (improvised explosive device) that bashed my left side against the truck I was riding in. My ears constantly ring, causing seriously degraded hearing from all the rounds, not only that I have fired, but also the ones cracking over my head, because fortunately the insurgent sniper was not as good a shot as he thought.

All that said, if you were to ask me if I would do it over again, my answer, without hesitation would be an emphatic "I absolutely would!" because I have also had countless life-altering positive accomplishments. I will forever have the pride and satisfaction that I voluntarily stood up to serve my country in a time of war on multiple fronts and survived. I have gotten to travel the world, even if most of the places I have been were desolate wastelands. I have made bonds with friends, brothers that no number of miles can break. I have learned skills so few people get the opportunity to see first-hand let alone master. I have seen the stuff movies are made of. I have felt the concussion of explosions, both friendly and enemy, and I will forever know that almost child-like excitement that comes with it.

Unfortunately the past year and a half of my military career has brought a sour note to my service, not because of my own misdeeds, but those of others. About BOI... years ago, I decided to change my MOS (military occupational specialty) from BOI/PR to BOI/PR. When I did, my new supervisor became BOI/PR. It became obvious early on that we seemingly had a lot in common. We were both prior infantry, both sniper trained, and both had an "old-military" mentality of accountability and integrity above all else. I flourished in my new role as a BOI/PR, and established myself as the non-commissioned officer best suited to take over the role of BOI/PR when my supervisor went to a d ifferent position in the unit. In BOI/PR, I was in BOI/PR completing the necessary training for my new MOS when rumors started flying that my wife was supposedly having an inappropriate relationship with BOI/PR. My wife caught word of it, and immediately told me about the rumors. I reported it to BOI/PR, and he quickly put the blame for the rumors on the wife of another NCO in my section and dismissed it as purely rumors based on jealousy because I was going to take over as BOI/PR. That NCO and his family had, until then, been very close with my family and I, and after learning of BOI/PR's findings, we regrettably had a falling out, keeping our relationship strictly professional. I returned from BOI/PR, got promoted, and became the BOI/PR.

Fast forward to BOI/PR at our annual training in BOI/PR. While my section and I were up at our observation point for three days doing a live fire exercise, I ha d an opportunity to have a serious talk with the NCO mentioned earlier regarding what had happened back in BOI/PR. He told me that there was a lot more that my wife was not telling me, and that it had been bothering him since our falling out. He told me he could no longer keep the information he had to himself. He told me they had screen shots of text message conversations between my wife and his wife, where my wife detailed some of the things BOI/PR had been saying and doing behind my back. He was hesitant to give me specific details, for fear of reviving prior conflicts, but told me that I should have a serious conversation with my wife.

When I got home I finally convinced my wife to come clean and tell me what she had been hiding from me for so long. She told me he had done things ranging from excessive complimenting to inappropriate touching, all the way up to pressuring my wife into telling him she loved him. He would regularly tell her things like "You look smoking hot." and "I only used BOI/PR to get close to you." and "If you stick with me, I will make sure your husband flies through the ranks." She told me he was constantly sending her text messages and would not stop. She told me that he had pressured her into telling him she loved him. She told me the only reason she hadn't told me sooner was because he used his rank and position to intimidate her and held my promotion over her head.

I got on my cell phone provider's website to substantiate what my wife had told me. I found that several months had hundreds, and sometimes thousands of text messages between BOI/PR and my wife. Most specifically, the month of BOI/PR, when I was in BOI/..., he obviously took advantage of my absence, sending and receiving over 5,000 text messages. There were also phone conversations, many of which were longer conversations than my wife and I typically have on the phone. I took all of what I had found to my commander and first sergeant, and they both immediately said it required serious action. They sent it up the chain of command, until it got to the brigade commander, then BOI/PR. He assigned a special investigating officer, BOI/PR, who was to come to BOI/PR to investigate the allegations, not only of BOI/PR's actions towards my wife, but other disturbing offenses committed towards female soldiers and inappropriate activities conducted in the BOI/PR armory after business hours.

BOI/PR came to BOI/PR in mid-BOI/... and conducted his investigation, interviewing several critical witnesses. The brigade commander decided it warranted further investigation and he briefed the state commander, Brigadier General Mike Bridges and the state command sergeant major, Command Sergeant Major Pam Harrington. He submitted his recommendation for BOI/PR's removal from the AGR program and a TDY move to Anchorage for separation proceedings. Throughout this process my wife and I were promised by my squadron commander, BOI/PR, the brigade commander, then-BOI/PR, and the state SARC (Sexual Assault Response Coordinator) Octavia Thompson that we would be kept updated on the case and how it was proceeding.

For the next two and a half to three months, we heard nothing other than "JAG is reviewing the case before they proceed". Finally, in late BOI/PR, along with my Command Sergeant Major and First Sergeant, briefed me that BOI/PR would be going TDY to Anchorage very soon for the remainder of the investigation. Nearly a month and a half later, we had heard nothing from anyone regarding the case. I confronted my commander, BOI/PR and my First Sergeant, BOI/PR, regarding the broken promise of being kept in the loop and the lack of communication. They told me that he was being processed for discharge, but that nothing had changed. I expressed to them that if that was in fact the case, then a two minute phone call to the victim should be pretty easy, at least to let her know that it was still on-going and that the unit had not forgotten their promise to her. My commander, BOI/PR called my wife that evening and apologized for the break-down in communication and gave her the same, limited information he had given me earlier that day.

Almost exactly one month later, I was advised that BOI/PR would be in town for the week of BOI/PR in order to sign items over to another leader. That weekend I found out from a subordinate soldier, who was not even part of the investigation, that BOI/PR had expressed to him that he had been going to mental health, and that the doctor "thought there might be something wrong" with him, and that they were allegedly going to prescribe him medication. The following Monday I asked my First Sergeant if he knew about the c onversation. He said he knew nothing about it. I raised the point that it had already come out that BOI/PR had previously threatened the other NCO involved in the investigation for questioning him regarding his conduct with the wives of soldiers, and how that information coupled with the new information of BOI/PR seeing a mental health professional raised serious safety and security concerns with not only myself and my family, but the other NCO involved and his family. My family and I recently moved to BOI/PR, and have opted not to give the unit our new address for safety and security reasons, however BOI/PR knows where the other NCO lives. Coincidentally, the week BOI/PR was in town, someone falsely accused the other NCO involved in the investigation of involvement in a hit-and-run. Fortunately, the other NCO was at work, furthermore, the vehicle he was allegedly driving, as described by the other driver with vehicle description, plate number, and driver de scription (mid-day, while he was at work) had been sitting at his house and had not been moved for a week, as he was on call with his civilian employer, therefore his personal vehicle was covered in snow and had no fresh tracks showing movement.

We are in the seventh month since this investigation began, and we still have gotten very little information, the case is moving at a snail's pace, and quite frankly, my family lives in fear and shame for what has happened and what could potentially happen if BOI/PR were to decide he wanted vengeance for my wife coming forward. We had filed for a restraining order early on, however, despite the mountain of evidence we presented to the magistrate, compared to BOI/PR's blank legal pad and the response of "I cannot refute the allegations, I am simply here to find out the terms of the restraining order." the magistrate somehow determined there was "not enough evidence to warrant a restraining order". My wife used to frequent ly go to the armory, volunteering her time to help coordinate family programs and unit morale events such as last year's unit Christmas party. Now she has sworn off the National Guard, and wants nothing to do with the unit. She no longer even supports me being in the National Guard, but endures my monthly duty because she knows it is a commitment I made.

Speaking of commitments, jumping back to BOI/PR, shortly before going to my training in BOI/..., I extended my contract for an additional BOI/PR in order to be eligible to attend my training. Shortly after arriving in BOI/..., the unit retention NCO contacted me and notified me there was a mistake on my contract, and that we needed to re-do it right away. I gave him the FAX number where he could send the new contract, and told him as soon as he sent it, I would sign it and send it back. The following day, I went to receive the FAX, and found he had never sent it. I contacted the retention NCO, and he said that his higher-ups said it could wait until I returned in early BOI/PR. When I returned, I immediately made contact with him to re-do my contract and he said he would get it taken care of and let me know when it was ready. This went on for several months, until we were just a few months away from my original ETS (Estimated Time of Separation), when I told my chain of command I was worried that it would not get done before my ETS, and that I would have no choice but to ETS because the contract was null and void. I also learned that the retention NCO failed to do the incentive contract he had promised, saying I would be paid a $10,000 incentive for my extension of

My ETS was originally in BOI/PR. By BOI/PR the unit finally started digging into what needed to be done, and found that someone had already mistakenly put the contract into the system, and that I was stuck with it, and would not get an incentive bonus. Our personnel NCOIC, BOI/PR went to great lengths researching regulation and policy to find a solution. He was finally able to find a solution that would result in the modification of the contract I signed in the BOI/PR, and I would then be able to sign a new contract, to include an incentive bonus contract. My ETS was adjusted to BOI/PR, and at the end of the last week of BOI/PR they finalized the new contract, this time extending for BOI/PR for an incentive bonus of $5,000. I was informed that the bonus would begin processing the day after my ETS, which was BOI/PR, and that it would take roughly 30 to 45 days to be deposited into my account. Well, we all know what happened with the government shut-down on BOI/PR, and obviously it delayed my incentive.

At the beginning of BOI/PR, when I spoke to my commander and first sergeant regarding the lack of communication about my wife's case, I also asked about my bonus, as it had been a month and I h ad heard no information about the status or timeline of my bonus.
They told me it was at PEC and NGB in Washington D.C. and that it should be deposited within a couple of weeks. A month later, and in true keeping of my unit's style, with no follow-up or communication as promised, I asked again, about my bonus. Three days later, I received a phone call from my commander stating that my bonus was still at PEC and NGB being reviewed. I am obviously getting nowhere with my unit, so I have decided to reach out to you. I truly hope that you can help me sort out what is going on with my bonus, and perhaps gain more ground than my unit is willing to attempt.

As I said earlier, I have served BOI/PR years in the military, and never once have I even gotten so much as a negative counselling statement. I do my best to set the example and uphold the highest standards. In the course of less than a year I have brought my section from a circus in shambles to the shining star of the brigade at our last annual training. My subordinates would do anything for me, because they know I would do anything for them. Perhaps that is just the mindset and mentality instilled in me by my grandfather, the World War 2 veteran. Perhaps I should be a bit more willing to change and adapt to the times, but in my mind, the generation of my grandfather was known as the best generation for a reason. They stood up for what was right, and accepted nothing less. If someone acted a fool or failed to make good on a promise, they were held accountable for it. I do not know when the military changed it's standard and deemed the current conduct acceptable, but it will never be acceptable in my mind.
In my mind, the military, not to mention the Alaska National Guard, with all it's rich heritage and history, should present a better image than that. I learned the Army Values in basic training. Loyalty. Duty. Respect. Selfless Service. Honor. Integrity. Personal Cou rage. I never would have imagined those values would become notional, only used on the recruiting commercials. The AGR's (guardsmen who have a full-time active job working for the National Guard) have developed a system of good-ol-boy back scratching where they take care of each other, only to trample all over the M-Day soldiers. They fail to realize, that as AGR's, they have a job solely to support the M-Day soldier that comprises the vast majority of the unit. They are too busy browsing The Chive or their Facebook accounts to ensure that the citizen soldiers who sacrifice so much for the unit are at least getting the compensation they are promised, compensation which is a mere fraction of the compensation for the very limited work the AGR's perform. The AGR's have forgotten what it is like to be an M-Day soldier, to have to scrape for every hour at their civilian job, just to make a meager income, trying to make ends meet. They forget that they get paid twice what most M-Day soldiers make in their civilian job, while doing half the work. They don't appreciate the fact they get that paycheck regardless of what time they show up, leave, or how long a lunch they take. When they turn a weekend drill into a Friday, Saturday, and Sunday drill with less than a month's notice, threatening soldiers with AWOL if they do not attend that Friday drill after they have already told their civilian employer, who pays far more, they could work. When they expect soldiers to turn their normal half hour lunch break into an hour and a half lunch break to meet their wants, causing that solider to miss out on an extra hour of pay, which, of course, the unit won't compensate for. For some of us, that extra hour is a day worth of fuel in our boiler keeping our families warm at night, or a dinner on the table to help our children grow. Many of the AGR's cannot even legitimately pass an Army Physical Fitness Test, often times faking the numbers so they are allowed to keep th eir job and get promoted to ranks they do not deserve and lower the standard that much more. These practices are not just the practices of one, but the majority. They are not only accepted by the chain of command in BOI/PR, but rewarded with illegitimate promotions. I am quickly learning why it is so common to hear so many locals in BOI/PR talk down about the military, and I just wish there was something I could do to change it. Hopefully with your help something can be done to change it. The tendency among the AGR's is to squirt a bit of oil on the squeaky wheels such as myself in order to quiet it down, only to resume pushing the cart through the mud puddle. Perhaps the problem is not the wheel, but the individual pushing the cart.

Good morning Cindy,

We had a good update meeting this morning with AKNG leadership, action officers, and field representatives from the AKNG to discuss the way forward.

If it works for your schedule, we would like to stop by your office at 1530 today to give you an update.

Attached are the slides that were discussed at the meeting this morning.

We look forward to talking with you again.

Please read the attached statements. They pertain to the 'investigation' that was supposed to take place after our deployment in BOI/PR Many statements were taken, including statements from personnel not from the Alaska Army Guard. The investigation simply stopped. Nothing was done to punish the wrong doers. Nothing was done to rectify the situation. Nothing was done to prevent this from happening again. It was not a sexual assault but it's a situation that should never have happened and is being covered up.

When you have another meeting with the guard leadership could you please ask them why this investigation was stopped? The investigating officer stopped returning phone calls and emails and no one will answer our questions.

We take your concerns and statements in your email very seriously, and I appreciate your candor with us. If you wish to talk on the phone, I am always available. You can reach me at our office line or my cell phone is BOI. We have so many wonderful people working within our Guard and we are committed to restoring the trust in leadership within the Guard that you each deserve. You have our word that we will not stop!

Subject: Guard investigation

Good morning

I was one of the individuals interviewed by OCI for this report. Although I agree with the findings of the report and I wholeheartedly support the demand for Katkus' resignation, I'm terrified that this will stop here.

Katkus should not only resign his position, he should be stripped of his commission and any retirement. The toxic command enviroment has been exposed and acknowledged and he presided over it for five years. Does it make sense to allow him to profit from that? Of course not. He did not start it but he perpetuated the current system and even thrived with it.

And for the love of God, DO NOT STOP! Katkus has been removed from his position. Get him out of the Guard! Immediately! Show the soldiers and airmen that this is not going to be, yet another cover up. General or not, Katkus had to have a support system to allow him to 'rule' the Guard. Every officer in the Army Guard, at least, needs to be thoroughly investigated by an outside legal team, along with every First Sergeant and Sergeant Major. These people all rose to their current ranks by working with the existing corrupt system and most own their allegiance to the same.

And lest you think this is just an administrative problem, ask the soldiers that deployed to BOI/PR. We suffered for a full year under the very definition of 'toxic command enviroment' and when we returned we could not get the Guard to even investigate. They actually started taking statements and then just stopped. No explanations. Now I'm stuck trying to explain to soldiers why nothing has happened. The command new about the problems while we were deployed and got an ear full from us when we returned, but took no action. And the worst part is, the biggest perpetrator was put back into his old position of being BOI/PR. Is this someone to be trusted to train future leaders?

Tell the governor that this resignation is a start, but only that. Please consider removing all the upper leaders from the Guard. That is the ONLY way this corruption will stop. Bring in officers and senior NCOs from out of state and allow them to restart the chain of command within the regs of the Army Guard.

> Sharon — Here's a part of what we want to explore with the governor tomorrow. We're giving you a heads up because the point isn't to blindside the governor, but to get the best information possible.
> • In the April 29 interview with APRN's Lori Townsend, Gov. Parnell said that immediately after hearing the concerns from the chaplains in 2010:
> "And I made sure that for the safety of the victims and any future victims in the Guard that there was, and is, a reporting process that's safe for anybody in the Guard to utilize; that there's an investigation process that is complete and accurate and directed that appropriate penalties be assessed. Now, that's outside the criminal context, but the criminal context goes directly to law enforcement. I had only those general allegations of sexual assault, but I still took action to make sure that there was a system in place that works for victims of sexual assault."
> And:
> "So, 4 years ago I was told there is a problem with sexual assault in the Guard. That is the sum and substance of what I was given."
> He made similar comments in the interview with Lisa Demer after the governors forum at the Anchorage Chamber in April, and when the OCI report was released earlier this month.
> As for the first part, how can Gov. Parnell say he ensured there was an effecting reporting policy? The OCI report specifically says the reporting scheme was completely broken until 2012, with an incompetent, unsupervised contract official running the program? “The team learned that records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. As a result, victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner required by DoD policy.” Even after 2012, the report said, many investigations into sexual assault "were led by individuals who lacked the speicialized training to conduct sexual assault investigations.“ Plus, guard leadership did little, if nothing, to assure the troops that anything had changed after 2012, leading first responders to counsel victims to not report to victim advocates within the guard.

As to the second part, it’s clear from the timeline of even the limited information that’s available that the “sum and substance” provided the governor was far broader than the matter of sexual assaults, and in fact clearly suggested the failed leadership that the OCI report would later confirm. Here’s the timeline I was able to cull from available documents. I suspect that if the governor’s office ever fulfilled the public records requests that Alaska Dispatch News and other media outlets and concerned citizens were seeking, there would be even more elements in this timeline.

• Oct. 14, 2010
Rick Koch takes outline of Guard issues to a neighbor who’s a friend of Gov Parnell, and a judge. The neighbor thought the issues were serious and that Parnell needed to see it, but he didn’t think it appropriate to do it himself because he was a judge, so he passed it on to another friend who gave it to Parnell. But rather than initiate a discussion, as Koch had hoped, Parnell ignored the outline and didn’t call him. The outline is called “The Bullet Points,” and has headings “Environment of Fear” and “Culture of Corruption.” The document says the “culture of fear and corruption are smothering morale in our organization.”

• Nov. 18, 2010
Three National Guard chaplains, Ted McGovern, Rick Koch and Matt Friese, phone Parnell from the office at Grace Christian Church of Friese. They spoke for 20 minutes about sexual assaults, lack of trust, and misuse of government resources and money. Takeaway by one of the chaplains: “It did not seem that he or his staff desired to drill very deeply into the problems of an organization that reaches into the entire landscape of the Alaska population.”

• Nov. 30, 2010
Several Air National Guardsmen send a complaint to the governor asking him to accept the resignation of MG Katkus because of “multiple acts of moral turpitude he had allowed to run rampant, including drug trafficking, sexual assaults and rapes, and illegal use of aircraft.

• Dec 3, 2010
Another teleconference meeting from Grace Christian to Gov. Parnell. This time, the three chaplains are joined by Col. Robert Doehl, the vice commander of the Air Guard’s 176th Wing., and two lieutenant colonels. Koch expressed some general feelings “that should have caused a sense of alarm, e.g., continued erosion of trust and command climate, imitation and fear.” Koch tells the governor that his Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Katie Tepas, had written statements from victims of sexual assault.

• Dec. 3, 2010
Col. Diehl follows up the meeting with a seven-page letter to Parnell. His letter mostly outlines leadership problems at the guard, including reprisals and efforts to prevent guardsman from complaining to the governor and air force investigators, but also discusses victims of sexual violence. Doehl accuses guard officers of abuse of authority, safety shortcuts that had resulted in loss of life and aircraft, cover-ups, cronyism and retaliation against whistleblowers. He named names, specifically accusing Lt. Gen. Craig Campbell, who became lieutenant governor in August 2009, and then-Maj. Gen. Katkus of failing to not only stop the misconduct, but covering it up.

• Dec. 9, 2010
Chaplain Koch writes a follow-up letter to Parnell, thanking him for the telephone meetings and expressing a kinship to the governor's religious convictions. ""Indeed, all of your chaplains — nine in total with 5 on the Army side and 4 on the Air side — are happy to know we have a main of faith serving as our Commander in Chief," he wrote. He continued to voice concerns about the top end of the guard. "Every month all our chaplains literally see hundreds of our Service Members and their families concerning a wide variety of personal issues and troubles. Among these issues lately are the plethora of complaints over the moral and ethical behaviors of our senior leadership, which has reach such a crescendo that we felt compelled over the past twelve months to try and address it with you after our pleas were ignored or rebuffed by our leaders."

• Dec. 29, 2010
Retired BG Gene Ramsey, from his home in White Bear Lake, Minn., sends a letter to Parnell expressing concerns about the current leadership, including cronyism and a failure to appoint qualified leaders. He had been commander of the 176th Wing.

• Jan. 4, 2011
LTC Kenneth Blaylock sends three-page letter to Parnell detailing reprisals and coverups of sexual assaults, and an assertion that drug dealing is also involved. Blaylock accuses the command of obstruction of justice and warns of a stain upon the governorship. "Morale will continue to drop and civilians will no longer wish to join the National Guard, unless they are looking for an organization that will allow them to get away with committing crimes."

• Dec. 29, 2011
Chaplains Friese and Koch speak by phone from Grace Christian with Mike Nizich, the designated contact for the chaplains. Friese and Koch went through the litany of sexual assaults, trust, low morale, abuse of power, misuse of resources, and Nizich said said he would relay their concerns to the governor after the new year.

• Jan 3, 2012
Friese, Air Guard Wing Chaplain Cavens, McGovern & Koch meet in Friese's office in Grace Christian and created an outline for the Military Decision Making Process to help any future transition. Koch passed on the MDMP to Nizich. "Over the course of about four months, I keep Nizich informed via email and never got a response form him once, except in February when I asked Ch Friese to call him and ask if he was receiving my emails," he wrote in an email.

• Feb. 3, 2012
Chaplain Rick Koch sends email to Nizich on Nizich's GCI email that "things started turning viral" in the guard. The Recruiting & Retention Commander, mentioned in a previous email for misusing a government credit card for $200,000, being tied to illegal drug use and linked to "many of the sexual assaults," will become senior operations officer on June 1, by order of Katkus. Yet Katkus has proof of credit card fraud on his desk. Whole thing has set the "sense of rage" to boiling on the Army side, Koch says. Koch wants to say more but only will do so in face-to-face meeting because of "security reasons."

• Early Fall, 2013
Sen. Fred Dyson goes to the governor. Dyson says Parnell wasn't giving the allegations proper credibility, he said.

• Oct. 27, 2013
Sean Cockerham story on something being rotten in the Guard. Sourced to two chaplains, Lt. Col. Rick Koch, and Lt. Col. Ted McGovern, and Sgt. Rosa Ralls and Lt. Col. Jane Wawersik.

• Fall 2013
After Cockerham story, Dyson goes to governor again, is told that the governor questioned the propriety of the chaplains talking to a reporter.

• Nov. 4, 2013
Sen. Hollis French writes his first letter to Parnell abut how sexual assault cases are handled in the National Guard. He wants information on cases, the numbers of referrals, prosecutions, etc.

• Feb. 24, 2014
ADN publishes story saying a dozen members of the Alaska National Guard face charges of sexual misconduct

• Feb 25, 2014
Sen. Hollis French writes his second letter to Parnell abut how sexual assault cases are handled in the National Guard, this time referencing an adn article from 2/24/2014.

• Feb. 26, 2014
Dyson again visits the governor. This time, he gives Parnell Jane Wawersik's phone number and asks him to call. He does, and they spend some 45 minutes on the phone.

• Feb 28, 2014
Parnell submits letter to Chief of the National Guard Bureau, Gen. Frank Grass, asking for an investigation of sexual assault, rape and fraud.

Dear Lt Col Scadden,

Thank you for your note to Governor Parnell and for sharing your concern regarding the release of the Office of Complex Investigation's Assessment Report. I have made an inquiry with the National Guard Bureau and will get back with you once I receive more information. My understanding is that this report was not a random release, and that the Governor had the authorization to release it. However, as stated, I am confirming that with the Guard Bureau, who knew we were going to release the report as soon as it was received.

I also appreciate your feeling that critical input should be given privately to the Governor. If you have any further concerns or questions, please do not hesitate to contact me personally and I will convey any messages to Governor Parnell. I hope you heard his concern for and commitment to our Alaska National Guard members during his talk recently at JBER. We are working hard to make needed reforms and to restore the trust in our Guard leadership – in full partnership with the National Guard Bureau and the team led by General Mott who Governor Parnell appointed to help implement the recommendations in the OCI Report.

As mentioned, I'll get back with you once I receive more information. And don't hesitate to give me a call or send an email if there is anything further I can assist with, or any additional questions you may have. Thank you for your service – it is most appreciated!

Kind regards,
Cindy

Governor,

I was in the audience today when you visited the "Contemporary Base Issues" conference at JBER. You invited questions, but I still believe that critical feedback to our leaders should be provided privately.

Sir, you released a FOUO-controlled report on a public website. I'm certain that I'm not the first to bring this to your attention. Weeks later, it still remains on the site and is still marked as FOUO. I'm certain I'm not the first to bring this to your attention.

I understand the need to release information to the public. However, airmen who mishandle FOUO are subject to penalties...and they receive it. The day you released the report, I was repeatedly asked about the FOUO violation. I could not provide an answer.
I was repeatedly reminded of what happens when anybody else violates FOUO handling. It's hard to pass your intended message when the other apparent message is that the rules apply to everybody, except those with enough rank. Truly, the opposite of what we attempted to achieve.

I get it. We are not slaves to classification/handling markings. Some things need to be in the open for the public good. There is a process for public release which I'm certain you could make happen instantaneously. Clear the FOUO marking and nobody will have a problem. As it exists now, it continues to be a reminder that those with rank and authority are not subject to the same rules as all of us. The real intended message is muddied.

With respect,

Michael Scadden, Lt Col, AKANG

From BOI/PR

BOI/PR

Dear Governor,

I have some serious concerns over the care of soldiers and family members at Bassett Army Community Hospital as well as the treatment of civilian and military staff by the command. I have had first hand experiences with both. Let me first say that I would like this to stay anonymous. I do not want my name attached to any of this in fear of retaliation.

First, I would like to address the concerns I have over the care that is being given at BACH. In regards to the recent NY Times article that was put out to include the Labor and Delivery floor at BACH, it is completely accurate. They have severely inexperienced personnel working the department and this puts both the moms and infants at serious risk. My wife and I decided to deliver off post for this reason. In addition, when we did seek treatment up there due to concerns my wife was having about fetal movement and an antibody she tested positive for, we were told that if anything was wrong with her then they would basically provide no treatment and a "hands off" approach and that the care is "barbaric". Those are words directly out of the doctors mouth. My wife's concerns were never addressed and getting her lab results took weeks after countless phone calls. I know there are numerous individuals who have experienced the same issues and worse. I know a couple individuals who have almost had their babies die due to the treatment.

In addition to the concerns about the LD floor, we have had first hand experiences at the awful care that the ER provides. There is a doctor there (Dr. BOI/PR who blows everyone off, doesn't spend any time with them, never does a true full assessment, and blows everything off as "viral". One experience was with my BOI/PR daughter who had a high fever for 5 days and signs of significant illness. Of course, he blew it off as viral. Overnight, the illness progressed and we made a same day appointment with Pediatrics because we lost faith in the ER. We had to basically play doctor and advocate for my daughter so that they would do a full workup. Eventually, they determined that my daughter had a serious illness called BOI/PR If this went unnoticed and we listened to Dr. BOI/PR, our daughter could have died or had long-term cardiac effects. She was eventually admitted to the hospital for almost 2 weeks and then was sent home with IV antibiotics for another week. Our care on the Medical/Surgical unit (where I used to personally work) was awful. Infection control measures were not practiced. The nurses fought with us when we asked them to wear gloves when they were manipulating my daughter's PICC line, and the doctors would not listen to our concerns. They knew very little about BOI/PR and it was almost like a guessing game. We requested to be transferred to a specialist at Seattle Children's and they didn't even give us the time of day. The care was awful. In fact, Senator Begich visited the hospital when we were admitted and the command group brought him into our room to ask about our care. As much as I wanted to say how dissatisfied I was, I couldn't because my job would have been on the line. In conclusion, the care was horrid and I eventually switched my whole family to Tricare Standard because the care at BACH is dangerous.

Last but not least, the command climate. We recently did a command climate survey and the results were awful. Soldiers are treated like crap. They don't staff us appropriately, which ultimately leads to patient safety issues. Our regional commander was suspended and possibly relieved for the same issue s. This leads me to my most frustrating complaint. Monday morning I received a phone call from the command suite secretary saying the 2 of the 3 deputy commanders wanted to speak to me by the direction of BOI/PR They would not tell me what it was about and they didn't even inform my immediate supervisors of this meeting so I was left alone with no representation. They began the meeting with, "do you know why you are today?". I said I did not. Then they asked me what my plans were in the military. I responded with my goals of eventually being a company commander or deploying or moving up in the organization. Then they asked me if I wanted to make this a career or looking to get out of the military and I responded with, "at this point in time I am looking at it as a career". They then responded with, "you might want to rethink those plans. You are here today because of some things your wife said on Facebook about her dissatisfaction with her care at BACH. This is unacceptable and it ultimately falls on you. Let me say though that your wife does have the right to say whatever she wants based on the first amendment, but oh this can affect your career." They threatened me with not giving me a command position, not promoting me within the hospital, and giving me a good OER. They basically threatened my career based on things my wife said, which she was just explaining her experiences with the car (her right). I then left the meeting BOI/PR
I felt my whole career just went up in flames and felt threatened. I felt attacked especially because I did not have anyone to represent me on my side. After all the hard work I did at the facility and throughout my BOI/PR year career in the military, this was how I was treated. It was completely dirty and unacceptable. Now, based upon all my negative experiences and traumatic events in the military, I am not received a medical board for significant issues.

In conclusion, this hospital needs to be seriously reviewed and evaluated. The command group needs to be seriously reviewed and evaluated. Nobody deserves this kind of treatment. The doctors in the ER need to be evaluated. There needs to be a broad based study on this hospital and quick. I am not the only one suffering from significant mental issues related to this hospital and the treatment. There have already been individuals who have threatened suicide and one of which already did. Something needs to change and I am writing you this in hopes that this will spark a change. This can and should not continue. Thank you for listening to my concerns.

Very respectfully,

BOI/PR

Mrs Sims,

Thank you for your reply. I have no issue whatsoever with the release of the report. Let the truth be told. My concern is that releasing it with its control markings sends a mixed message. Folks may (and do) interpret that the rules we apply for FOUO do not apply to those with enough rank (and what else doesn't apply?).

We enforce rules on information transmission that include limited release and transmitting FOUO encrypted. My concern here is not the content of the report, but that it be released in a way that truly makes it public. Authorized public releases are not marked FOUO, SECRET, or anything else. Doing so diminishes the meaningfulness of our control markings.

I do not want the governor's message lost in the way it was given.

Thank you for your response.

I have made an inquiry with the National Guard Bureau and will get back with you once I receive more information. My understanding is that this report was not a random release, and that the Governor had the authorization to release it. However, as stated, I am confirming that with the Guard Bureau, who knew we were going to release the report as soon as it was received.

contact me personally and I will convey any messages to Governor Parnell. I hope you heard his concern for and commitment to our Alaska National Guard members during his talk recently at JBER. We are working hard to make needed reforms and to restore the trust in our Guard leadership – in full partnership with the National Guard Bureau and the team led by General Mott who Governor Parnell appointed to help implement the recommendations in the OCI Report.

As mentioned, I'll get back with you once I receive more information. And don't hesitate to give me a call or send an email if there is anything further I can assist with, or any additional questions you may have. Thank you for your service – it is most appreciated!

Governor,

I was in the audience today when you visited the "Contemporary Base Issues" conference at JBER. You invited questions, but I still believe that critical feedback to our leaders should be provided privately.

Sir, you released a FOUO-controlled report on a public website. I'm certain that I'm not the first to bring this to your attention. Weeks later, it still remains on the site and is still marked as FOUO. I'm certain I'm not the first to bring this to your attention.

I understand the need to release information to the public. However, airmen who mishandle FOUO are subject to penalties...and they receive it. The day you released the report, I was repeatedly asked about the FOUO violation. I could not provide an answer. I was repeatedly reminded of what happens when anybody else violates FOUO handling. It's hard to pass your intended message when the other apparent message is that the rules apply to everybody, except those with enough rank. Truly, the opposite of what we attempted to achieve.

I get it. We are not slaves to classification/handling markings. Some things need to be in the open for the public good. There is a process for public release which I'm certain you could make happen instantaneously. Clear the FOUO marking and nobody will have a problem. As it exists now, it continues to be a reminder that those with rank and authority are not subject to the same rules as all of us. The real intended message is muddied.

With respect,

Michael Scadden, Lt Col, AKANG

Hi, Cindy, I made an offer to Tara based on our experience providing both training to the Alaska National Guard (dealing with change; workplace bullying) and our experience providing EEO and anti-harassment training (for 30 years). We'd be glad to offer the state discounted assistance. Governor Parnell and Elizabeth Giardana both know me. Thanks.

This story isn't going away folks, it's time to put on your big-boy pants and handle this in an open and transparent manner.

The cover up is always worse than the crime.

Always.

Each and every one of you whom I've addressed this to needs to take a long look in the mirror, and ask yourselves if you've done the right thing.

If you can't be honest with yourself, then who can you be honest with ?

Meanwhile the Chaplains were made to apologize to a room full of senior personnel at the most recent Leadership Conference, and were then browbeaten and chewed out for bringing this all to light. Parnell still has allowed the Rapists to depart with only punishment for violating regulations not law, while his State Troopers are kept from doing their jobs. And the other senior personnel that supported and worked with Katkus to commit the illegal activities, cover up the reports, and hold reprisal against the victims and witnesses are left in their positions so they can continue to intimidate and manipulate the organization and cover up their own actions.

Parnell defends response to Guard allegations

BECKY BOHRER, ASSOCIATED PRESS

October 2, 2014

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Gov. Sean Parnell is defending his administration's response to allegations of sexual assault and problems within the Alaska National Guard.

Parnell tells reporters he thought he was misled on several occasions by former Adjutant Gen. Thomas Katkus.

Parnell asked for and received Katkus' resignation last month following a report into allegations of sexual assault and fraud that found victims lacked confidence in the command and did not trust the system.

Parnell also asked for the resignation of McHugh Pierre, a deputy commissioner of Alaska's Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. He says more changes are coming.

Parnell, who has been criticized for not responding quickly enough to concerns, says that to his knowledge, everyone within his office acted in good faith. He says he has complete confidence in his staff.

Thank you, Chaplain McGovern, for forwarding your message to me – and for making a statement. We appreciate both you and Chaplain Koch's efforts as we continue working to restore trust and confidence in our Guard leadership and to implement the OCI report recommendations. As we discussed earlier, please contact me if you have questions or any further concerns you wish to share with me or directly with Governor Parnell. I know that as we all continue working together with Guard members and leadership, the OCI team, National Guard Bureau, and our office – we will see positive changes and a transformation of our Alaska National Guard. I know you are both committed to this as well, and trust you will let me know if you have concerns.

Take care,
Cindy

Cindy,

Last week, we provided our PAO, Lt Col Olmstead with the following statement. We took seriously your request to make a statement, and Lt Col Olmstead helped us greatly.

"We are thankful for the diligence of the OCI assessment team and the willingness and determination of General Bridges and his team to not only dig into the report, but even more to affect positive and lasting change in the Alaska National Guard." CH (LTC) Rick Koch and CH (LTC) Ted McGovern

God bless you,

Cindy, thank you for bringing this matter to our attention. You correctly identified that the Report of Investigation was published on the website containing the "For Official Use Only" marking. Please be assured that the documents were not mishandled and the Report was appropriately released. Prior to release of the Report all documents were thoroughly reviewed by appropriate agency officials and ultimately cleared for public release. To address any remaining concerns, the Report was removed and replaced with a version without the "For Official Use Only" markings.

I. Executive Summary

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard [(AKNG)]." The request highlighted concerns over reports of sexual assault and allegations of a hostile work environment within the AKNG. The Governor's request also sought an overall assessment of the AKNG's command structure and its responses in cases of sexual assault that were otherwise referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition.

Synopsis

The National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations conducted a statewide assessment into the Alaska National Guard and made findings and recommendations in the areas of sexual assault, EEO/EO matters, coordination with local law enforcement, Alaska National Guard member misconduct, command climate and the administration of justice.

A. Findings

- The AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well-organized, but victims do not trust the system due to an overall lack of confidence in the command;

- The AKNG leadership has failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program;

- The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate coordination with local law enforcement regarding cases of misconduct committed by members of the AKNG;

- There were several instances of fraud committed by AKNG members and leadership at the facilities level, but that this fraudulent activity did not have an impact on the reporting of sexual assault. Examples of fraud included embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and misuse of government equipment for personal gain. On 27 August 2014, Governor Parnell requested that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- Actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding trust and confidence in AKNG leadership; and

- The AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct.

B. Recommendations

- The NGB-JA/OCI Team provided seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the state;

- The Team provided five separate recommendations to improve the State Equal Employment Opportunity program;

- The Team recommends that allegations of misconduct under investigation by law enforcement be tracked by the AKNG Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer;

- The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a separate assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG;

- The Team recommends that all levels of command in the AKNG reevaluate their approach to leading soldiers in a positive manner and provided seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's visit and through the climate survey; and

- The Team identified nine areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the administration of justice within the state.

II. Background

On 28 February 2014, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell submitted a letter to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, General Frank J. Grass, requesting that the National Guard Bureau's Office of Complex Investigations (NGB-JA/OCI) investigate "open and closed investigations related to reports of sexual assault, rape, and fraud among members of the Alaska National Guard." In accordance with CNGBM 0400.01, the Chief Counsel for the National Guard Bureau (NGB) appointed an NGB-JA/OCI Assessment Team, hereinafter referred to as "the Team." The assessment was conducted from 19 March 2014 until 13 June 2014.

On or about 19 March 2014, members of the Team travelled to Anchorage, Alaska to meet with Governor Parnell and obtain his specific guidance on the scope of the assessment. Governor Parnell requested an independent look at the AKNG's training, reporting, investigating, and case disposition practices in the areas of sexual assault, hostile work environment (e.g., sexual harassment), and fraud. Additionally, the Governor requested that the Team review matters that were referred to civilian law enforcement for disposition but never prosecuted and assess the current culture, policies, and personnel practices of the AKNG (Army and Air) to determine their effect on the current command climate.

The Team developed an action plan which included: conducting a statewide command climate survey; collecting identified data requirements; conducting on-site interviews at all major AKNG locations; interviewing all AKNG senior leaders, to include the Adjutant General (TAG), the Assistant Adjutant General for both the Air and Army National Guard, and the Director of the Joint Staff; and coordinating with Army Criminal Investigation Division (CID) and local Alaskan law enforcement officials.

From 1 April through 1 June 2014, a command climate survey was conducted using a DoD-approved survey tool through the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute. The Team conducted most of the interviews and reviewed data provided during the timeframe of 28 April through 12 June 2014.

The Team collected volumes of data and travelled over 1,000 miles, visiting Ft. Greely, Eielson Air Force Base (AFB), Clear Air Force Station (AFS), and Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson (JBER). The Team also conducted over 185 personal interviews. Those interviewed included current, former, and retired members of the Alaska Army and Air National Guard; members of the active duty U.S. Air Force; part-time and full-time civilian AKNG employees; civilian state military forces leaders; local, state and federal civilian law enforcement officials; and U.S. Army Alaska (USARAK) Criminal Investigation Division (CID) officials.

The Team reviewed all allegations and issues identified in the initial request for assistance, as well as subsequent allegations identified through various means including e-mail communications, federal and state congressional submissions, anonymous correspondence, recent media reports, and on-site interviews.[1]

The Team's directive and goal was not to re-investigate previous allegations of sexual assault, hostile work environment, fraud or other misconduct, but rather to assess the instances of misconduct as a whole, identifying common themes among behavior that was already known to have occurred, further evaluating how those incidents were handled by the command. The Team did this by reviewing each allegation of misconduct and the corresponding investigation through analysis of data provided by the AKNG in response to the Team's data request (Tab C) and thru personal interviews conducted by the Team. In this way, each of the Governor's requests is individually addressed within this report.

[1] The Team reviewed all documentation regarding the foregoing matters, to include assessing the administrative actions taken and the current status of the individuals involved. In some cases, the Team re-interviewed witnesses to collect additional evidence or to clarify prior statements. During the course of these interviews, additional and insightful information regarding the organization, its operating standards, and unique challenges became apparent. In order to limit the scope of the assessment to the directed matters, however, the team explored only those additional allegations that either clarified the initial action of the command or provided factual information not previously identified during the initial inquiry.

III. Action Plan

The Team developed the following action plan to address each of the Governor's area of concern: Sexual Assault; Hostile Work Environment; Fraud, Coordination with Law Enforcement; Misconduct; and Command Climate. Each is addressed more fully below.

A. Sexual Assault

In response to the allegations of sexual assault, the Team focused on four areas: review of reported allegations of sexual assault and the actions taken regarding those reports; interviews with victims of the reported sexual assaults, which included both unrestricted and restricted reports[2]; review of AKNG sexual assault policies, practices, training and command emphasis; and review of the results of the NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding sexual assault).

The AKNG provided a matrix of all reported incidents of sexual assault since the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program was initiated in 2006. There were 37 reports of sexual assault; of those, 17 were unrestricted and eight identified sexual assault perpetrators. Some of the allegations reported were investigated by the AKNG; however, most of the allegations involved civilian perpetrators and were referred to AK local law enforcement officials for investigation.

B. Hostile Work Environment

A hostile work environment occurs when there is discriminatory or harassing behavior that is so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[3] Consistent with the Governor's request, the Team focused on three areas: review of all allegations of hostile work environment, including a review of all Equal Employment Opportunity/Equal Opportunity (EEO/EO) complaints and the action taken; interviews with formal complainants and prospective complainants; and the results of the OCI command climate survey (specifically, the responses to questions regarding EEO/EO matters).

[2] Under DoD policy, the victim, in coordination with their victim advocate (VA), may request that a report of sexual assault be either restricted or unrestricted. Pursuant to DoD Directive 6594.01, the Restricted Reporting option allows sexual assault victims to confidentially disclose the assault to specified individuals (i.e., SARC, SAPR VA, or healthcare personnel), and receive medical treatment, including emergency care, counseling, and assignment of a SARC and SAPR VA, without triggering an official investigation. The victim's report provided to healthcare personnel (including the information acquired from a SAFE Kit), SARCs, or SAPR VAs will NOT be reported to law enforcement or to the command to initiate the official investigative process unless the victim consents or an established exception applies.

The Team requested a roster of all EEO/EO complaints going back 10 years; however, there was no clear record-keeping system available that would provide that information.[4] The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM) provided details regarding three active complaints currently being addressed within AKNG units. Additional concerns and complaints were discovered by the Team during the course of the assessment phase and referred to the SEEM or discussed with responsible commanders, as appropriate with the concurrence of the disclosing interviewees. Finally, information regarding the EEO/EO program was provided in the OCI climate survey.

C. Fraud

In response to allegations of fraudulent activities in the AKNG, the Team focused on three areas: review of reported incidents of fraudulent activities and the action taken regarding such reports; interviews with commanders, investigating officers, internal review officials, and the office of the USPFO; and review of internal audits conducted by the AKNG.

The Team reviewed several minor reported incidents of inappropriate use of the Government Purchase Card, each of which was administratively handled through a letter of reprimand/admonishment. There were two high-profile fraud incidents: one incident involved a senior AKNG officer who misused government equipment for personal use, and the another incident involved a senior AKNG enlisted member who re-directed donated funds for personal gain. While each incident was investigated by agencies outside the AKNG, the Team interviewed several personnel involved in those investigations as well as

[4] When interviewed, the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the individual responsible for State EEO/EO management and oversight, did not have a database which tracked complaints.

members within the AKNG during the time period when the fraudulent activity occurred. During the course of these interviews, several questions regarding the lawful use of federal funds by state and federal program managers were raised so the Team expanded the scope of fraud to include a review of the AKNG facilities program.

D. Coordination with Law Enforcement

In response to questions regarding the coordination between the AKNG and local law enforcement, the Team focused on three areas: a review of all written agreements between the AKNG and AK law enforcement organizations from 2004-2014; a review of the list of all reported misconduct made by or to law enforcement or any Military Criminal Investigative Organizations (MCIO) involving AKNG full-time and part-time military personnel over the past 10 years; and interviews with AKNG leaders and local law enforcement personnel.

In most cases, AKNG records only went back to approximately 2009-2010, and there was no standardization across lower-level commands within the AKNG with regard to misconduct reporting and tracking. The AKNG provided information regarding 64 cases of misconduct that was reported to local law enforcement over the last 10 years; of those, 56 resulted in disciplinary action. Interviews with local law enforcement officials provided the most detailed information regarding joint efforts in coordination.

E. Misconduct in the AKNG

To assess the AKNG leadership's handling of the reports of misconduct, the Team reviewed a list of all incidents of misconduct that were tracked at the unit level as well as paper and digital copies of all AKNG command policies and procedures from 2004 to 2014 pertaining but not limited to sexual assault and harassment, fraternization, DUI, improper use of government equipment, recruiting and retention, and ethical standards of conduct.

The AKNG provided 494 reports of misconduct over the past 10 years.[5] The Team reviewed the files and administrative actions taken in response to the reported misconduct, and it conducted interviews with individuals involved in several of the incidents where administrative action followed.

[5] This number includes the 46 cases that were reported to local law enforcement referenced above and 24 EO cases. Of the total number, 115 cases were designated as general misconduct, 3 were cases of fraud, 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, and 62 were alcohol-related incidents.

F. Command Climate

The Team coordinated with the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute (DEOMI) to initiate an NGB-JA/OCI command climate survey targeted at soliciting feedback from all members of the AKNG, to include part-time, full-time support, and federalized members. The survey directly solicited feedback from within the AKNG regarding their leaders' ability to lead, confidence in their leadership, favoritism and respect. Additionally, the team requested copies of any command climate surveys conducted by the AKNG over the preceding five years, as well as all NGB Safety Assessments and NGB Staff Assistance Visit (SAV) reports.

During the period of 1 April to 1 June 2014, approximately 25% of the AKNG participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The results of the survey, detailed in Appendix A, confirmed the issues identified by the Team during their onsite interviews and reiterated issues that had been raised in the 22 previous surveys conducted by the AKNG.

IV. Analysis

Pursuant to its appointment memorandum, the Team focused their efforts primarily on allegations identified in the Action Plan. The Team interviewed over 185 witnesses and reviewed volumes of documents in order to establish an understanding of how each of these areas were managed and addressed within the AKNG, and to note deficiencies, identify any common themes; and, where appropriate, make specific remedial recommendations. The Team's findings and recommendations are detailed in Sections VI through IX below.

The Team identified persistent negative themes in the areas of administration and management of legal support and a general lack of confidence and trust in the AKNG leadership at various levels.

The Team concluded that the lack of confidence relating to both the legal support provided to the command and the lack of trust in the AKNG leadership is impeding the organization from reaching its full potential, and this persistent negative theme is contributing to the perception that the AKNG leadership is not addressing the concerns of sexual assault victims.

A. Analysis of Sexual Assault

The Team conducted extensive interviews with victims who had reported sexual assaults, victim advocates, other current and former service members who supported those victims, and the commanders who implement the DoD Sexual Assault and Prevention Response program within their organizations. The Team reviewed the results of its command climate survey, wherein all participants were asked specific questions regarding sexual assault and sexual assault reporting, and the Team concluded there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011. These issues included poor execution, oversight, and management, as well as suspected confidentiality breaches.

The Team concluded that there were clear and significant programmatic issues with the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program from 2007-2011.

1. Sexual Assault Program Management

Prior to 2012, the AKNG Joint Force Headquarters Sexual Assault Response Coordinator was a contract employee. This was consistent across the lower 48 states as the National Guard Joint Forces Headquarters (NG JFHQ) manning requirements did not initially include a requirement for a Title 32, Non-Dual Status Technician to serve as the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator. Like programs in other states, however, the AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program was, in fact, overseen by a military member assigned to Family Programs within the AKNG personnel section (J1).

The contract employee serving as the AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator had been appropriately certified through the National Guard Bureau's training in the management of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. According to witnesses and records that were reviewed, she operated independently within the AKNG J1 with little actual supervision and without adequate oversight. The Team learned that records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. As a result, victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner as required by DoD Policy.[6]

Prior to 2012 records regarding reports of sexual assault were not properly maintained or tracked, and in some cases were never completed. Victims and leaders were not properly informed regarding the status of their cases, victims were not offered treatment services, and victim information was not adequately treated in a confidential manner.

The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contract was managed by the AKNG J1 Director of Family Programs, who, at that time, was not trained in the DoD Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. During the Team's interview with the Director, she acknowledged being unaware of the contractor's deficiencies and confirmed that she relied on the expertise of the contractor to inform her of the program's requirements and any deficiencies. As a result, the magnitude of the record-keeping problem in the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program did not surface until the contractor left the position.

[6] Additional SAPR guidance is provided in Air Force Policy Directive 36-60 and Army Regulation 600-20.

A Title 32, non-dual-status technician position was created in 2011. This resulted in the hiring of a trained and qualified Sexual Assault Response Coordinator who was capable of reshaping the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program over the past three years. The Team found the current program to be effective, and the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator to be well-organized, responsive to victims, well-respected, and actively engaged with the AKNG leadership. Her monthly Sexual Assault Review Board meeting is regularly attended by all senior leaders (to include the TAG and the Assistant Adjutants General Air and Army); thereby ensuring these senior leaders are aware of the current program needs and the status of victim's cases. Interviews with victims that have been in contact with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator confirmed they were generally satisfied with the support she has provided.

Prior program deficiencies have had a lingering effect, however. The Team noted that, when discussing the program with other first responders (Judge Advocates and Chaplains), they stated they would not recommend that sexual assault victims report their assault to the AKNG's Victim Advocates, citing prior program deficiencies as the primary reason.

The Team identified additional concerns from an organizational standpoint. Several witnesses stated that, in the case of the Air National Guard, the Victim Advocate position is an additional duty for the executive officer, who sits within the very command headquarters suite that many reporting victims want to avoid. The location of this position is creating the unfounded perception among airmen that the executive officers are unable to provide confidential assistance, despite the officers' availability by phone or email to arrange a meeting elsewhere. This issue was unique to the Air National Guard as the Army National Guard Victim Advocates are more distributed throughout the force and within the ranks.

The OCI command climate survey substantiated that AKNG service members believed they were working in an environment that was safe from sexual assault and that they would receive support from the chain of command and the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, a significant number of respondents perceived substantial barriers to reporting sexual assault, reflecting a possible continuing lack of trust within the command. Interviews with service members revealed that the positive changes in the management of the program since 2011 are not widely known, at least not as well-known as the challenges that existed in the program prior to 2011.

2. Victim Confidentiality

Most of the individuals interviewed stated that they knew who their Victim Advocate was and understood the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; nonetheless, most individuals also indicated that they would not report a sexual assault due to concerns over confidentiality. The Team noted that prior to 2012 there had been instances wherein commanders either obtained the names of victims who made restricted reports of sexual assault or distilled that same information from the "sanitized" reports that were made in contradiction to DoD policy.[7] Additionally, victims reported that in some cases they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making their restricted reports. Such conduct is in violation of DoD policy.

Some victims reported that they were ostracized and even abused by fellow service members after making restricted sexual assault reports.

Several individuals interviewed expressed concern with reporting a sexual assault, questioning the value of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Several senior AKNG service members interviewed expressed the sentiment that they could not afford to be seen as "a victim" or "weak" in their senior leaders' eyes and therefore would not report. Such sentiment creates the perception that the program is unnecessary, sending the wrong message to commanders, which in turn impacts reporting and assistance for victims.

Confidentiality continues to remain a challenge for the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program.

During the on-site assessment, a victim of sexual assault reported to the Team that she had overheard a fellow service member discussing the details of her own assault while at work. Though she was not individually identified and the individual who was reportedly discussing the information likely did not know her identity as the victim, she was understandably disturbed by the casual manner in which her supposedly confidential information was being maintained and openly discussed.

3. Sexual Assault Case Disposition

The team reviewed 37 cases of sexual assault: 15 were either filed as restricted reports or were not investigated at the request of the victim; 20 were investigated by local law enforcement; and 2 were investigated by MCIOs[8]. Of the 20 investigated by local law enforcement, 4 were still open at the time of the Team's assessment and 16 were closed without further investigations. Many of the 16 closed cases involved the use of alcohol, delayed reporting, or had other evidentiary challenges. As a result, these cases were not prosecuted by local authorities.

Notwithstanding the challenges of criminal prosecution, military commanders have administrative tools available to maintain good order and discipline within military units. Therefore, it is appropriate for commanders to consider administrative action following or pending a decision by local authorities to prosecute a sexual assault case. The Team reviewed only one case where the AKNG leadership decided to pursue administrative action against a perpetrator notwithstanding local law enforcement's decision not to prosecute.

The AKNG leadership from 2009-2013 initiated numerous internal administrative investigations into reported sexual assaults. The Team noted, however, that many of these investigations were led by individuals who lacked the specialized training to conduct sexual assault investigations. As a result, the AKNG administrative investigations were not adequately conducted in some cases.[9]

The AKNG's recent efforts to properly investigate and hold offenders accountable for sexual assaults through coordination with law enforcement and OCI complies with DoD guidance on Sexual Assault Prevention and Response.

[8] MCIOs initially investigated 5 allegations however 3 were referred to local law enforcement once due to jurisdictional issues. Of the 2 cases remaining 1 case went to Court Martial and resulted in acquittal, the other was closed due to insufficiency of evidence.
[9] To address the specific concern that state National Guards lacked sufficient investigative resources, the NGB established the NGB Office of Complex Investigations (OCI) in 2012.

Several investigations conducted in the AKNG since 2013 were conducted either by OCI [10] or by an officer certified to investigate on OCI's behalf while serving in a state status. Several of these cases were proceeding toward administrative action at the time of the Team's assessment.

Sexual assault investigations within the National Guard require specialized training due to the complex jurisdictional issues presented. Likewise, state codes typically vary from the DoD definition of sexual assault. Accordingly, not all allegations meeting the military's definition of sexual assault will be investigated by local law enforcement or prosecuted under state law.[11] A detailed discussion of these jurisdictional issues is provided at Appendix C.

B. Analysis of EEO/EO Matters

The Governor requested that the assessment address behavior that may have created "a hostile environment and culture within portions of the AKNG." To assess whether a work environment is "hostile," the Team had to evaluate whether discriminatory and harassing behavior existed and, if founded, whether such behavior was so "severe or pervasive as to create a hostile or abusive work environment."[12]

To determine whether a hostile work environment existed, the Team reviewed formal and informal EEO/EO complaints. The data request revealed an incomplete record of complaints regarding hostile work environment, discrimination and sexual harassment.[13] Accordingly, most of the information

[10] Pursuant to CNGBN 0400.01, command investigative options are limited to military criminal investigative organizations, local law enforcement, or the NGB Office of Complex Investigations.

[11] The Alaska Revised Statutes Section 11.41.420 definition of sexual assault does not include abuse of authority.

[12] NG PAM 600-22, paragraph 5-6d, provides that when conducting an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment, investigators must document whether or not the harassment was quid pro quo (submission to such conduct is made explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment) or a hostile environment (conduct unreasonably interfering with an individual's job performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, offensive working environment). See also Burlington v. Ellerth, 118 S. Ct. 2257 (1998).

[13] Notwithstanding, the Team did not identify any instances leading to a conclusion of an affirmative withholding of information had occurred, just a general lack of oversight and management.

reviewed by the Team was collected during interviews with the State Equal Employment Manager (SEEM), the unit Equal Opportunity Advisors (EOAs), individual witnesses, and OCI survey responses. The AKNG EEO/EO Office did not maintain a database to track EEO/EO complaints; however, the AKNG SEEM reported there were three known EO complaints. This is inconsistent with the 200 instances identified in the OCI command climate survey, of which 35 were reported to someone within the service member's organization.[14] Additionally, the Team notes that these survey results were only reflective of the 25% of the AKNG who both participated in the survey and responded to questions regarding discrimination and harassment in the workplace, thus indicating that the "real" number was likely higher.

The Team interviewed several individuals who stated that they were subjected to a hostile work environment characterized by inappropriate sexual comments and disparate treatment based on ethnic/national origin. These witnesses stated during interviews that they were treated disparately and had elevated their concerns through their chain of command without successful resolution. A few stated they have lost faith in their leadership's ability to do the right thing. Many referenced the lack of disciplinary action taken by leadership against members who were known to have engaged in fraternization or inappropriate conduct. A further analysis into the specific areas of sexual harassment, disparate treatment, and reprisal/retaliation is included below.

1. Sexual Harassment

Sexual Harassment occurs when there are unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or other inappropriate verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature. [15] The Team learned of several examples of inappropriate

[14] See pages 10-11 of both the AKARNG and AKANG OCI Climate Surveys.

[15] Sexual Harassment is defined by National Guard policy as "a form of gender discrimination that involves unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when: (1) Submission to or rejection of such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of a person's job, pay, or career; or (2) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by a person is used as a basis for career or employment decisions affecting that person; or (3) Such conduct interferes with an individual's performance or creates an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment. Any person in a supervisory or command position who uses or condones implicit or explicit sexual behavior to control, influence, or affect the career, pay, or job of a military member or civilian employee is engaging in sexual harassment. Similarly, any military member or civilian employee who makes deliberate or repeated unwelcome verbal comments, gestures, or physical contact of a conduct of a sexual nature in its interviews with AKNG personnel, including a report of pictures of male genitalia drawn inside aircraft panels at an ANG Wing, flight instructors having sex with flight students, and senior leaders sending harassing and inappropriate text messages. Witnesses reported that AKNG internal inquiries into their complaints failed to substantiate the harassing behavior and as a result no action was taken. Indeed the information provided by the ANG Wings did not reflect that any administrative action occurred as a result of the complaints made.

The Team also learned that there were recent allegations of sexual harassment that had not been referred to EEO/EO; rather, the AKNG leadership was aware of these allegations, which were handled through internal investigation. Leaders should be directly involved in the EEO/EO program and they should collaborate with EEO/EO personnel to provide appropriate lawful recourse for both the complainant and the subject of the complaint. In several instances leaders attempted resolution without the assistance of EEO/EO personnel, this is not optimal. Service members interviewed by the Team perceived leadership efforts at internal resolution as an attempt to cover up sexual harassment allegations. This perception was reiterated in the OCI climate survey, which highlighted fear of reprisal and lack of support from the chain of command as the primary barriers to reporting discrimination.

2. Disparate Treatment

Disparate Treatment refers to intentional treatment of a person that is different than that provided to others based on one or more protected factors.[16] A large number (50+) of Puerto Rican Army National Guard members moved from Puerto Rico to Alaska to supplement the AKNG Military Police unit at Ft. Greely, AK. Several members discussed disparate treatment towards the Spanish-speaking members of this unit. They related that their leadership told Puerto Rican soldiers that they were not allowed to speak Spanish in the "operational" area, which some consider the entire installation. Under Army Policy, commanders may not require the use of English for personal communications that are unrelated to military functions.[17] Command emphasis on the language issue has created a negative environment within the remote location, where members report that some military spouses are even posting derogatory comments about Spanish speaking spouses on social media sites.

There were are also concerns raised about providing medical care for families of service members assigned to Ft. Greely, specifically those with spouses from Puerto Rico. While medical care was a hot topic across the installation, either a lack of information or a lack of command attention created a rift among the former Puerto Rico National Guard members who believed they were receiving diminished medical support for their families because of their national origin. Several individuals interviewed at Ft. Greely stated they were required to provide medical documentation that their families are healthy due to the remoteness of the location, and that these documents were maintained in their personnel files which would impact their tour continuation.[18] They believed this requirement was unique to them based on their national origin, noting that local members of the AKNG were not required to file similar documentation. When the Team inquired with the S1 personnel at Ft Greely about medical documentation, they did not receive a clear response. The S1 himself was confused about the requirement.

Follow-up conversations with the AKNG J1, at JBER, clarified that Army policy requires service members to identify any special needs for family members for which adequate medical care may not be available at certain remote sites. [19] Although this conflicted with the broad requirement implemented at Ft Greely, the Team concluded that the practice was not intended to target certain categories of individuals and may be remedied through additional training.

[17] AR 600-20, paragraph 4-13, provides: "English is the operational language of the Army. Soldiers must maintain sufficient proficiency in English to perform their military duties. Their operational communication must be understood by everyone who has an official need to know their content, and, therefore, must normally be in English. However, commanders may not require Soldiers to use English unless such use is clearly necessary and proper for the performance of military functions."

3. Reprisal/Retaliation

Reprisal occurs when leaders take or threaten to take unfavorable action or withhold favorable action against a military member for making a protected statement, participating in a protected activity, or preparing a protected disclosure.

In order to prevent reprisal/retaliation from occurring, EEO/EO counselors and commanders are required by NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3 to provide the complainant and witnesses with a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan. This plan outlines what constitutes reprisal, covers the Military Whistleblower Protection Act, and outlines the possible consequences for a reprisal action.[20] The plan is to be completed with the assistance of EO professionals and given to the complainant and witnesses involved in EO cases. If used in accordance with regulations, the Reprisal Prevention Plan could eliminate the perception of retaliation and encourage members to come forward with their concerns.

AKNG commanders were not developing a Commander's Reprisal Prevention Plan

The Team was informed by AKNG EEO/EO personnel that commanders were not completing these plans or advising witnesses of their concern regarding reprisal/retaliation with every new reported complaint. This fact may explain why the OCI survey revealed that one of the top reasons personnel do not report incidents of harassment/discrimination is due to fear of reprisal/retaliation.

[20] Reprisal is defined as by National Guard policy as "taking (or threatening to take) an unfavorable personnel action, or withholding (or threatening to withhold) a favorable personnel action for having engaged in a protected equal opportunity activity…" NGR 600-22/ANGI 36-3, at 38 (Glossary).

4. EEO/EO Program Management

The AKNG SEEM is performing two roles within the AKNG Human Resources Office (HRO) – AGR Staffing Specialist and Equal Employment Manager. She shares her office with another officer and has no privacy. She does not directly report to the TAG; rather, she reports issues to the Chief of Human Resources, who accompanies her on all briefings regarding EEO/EO matters provided to the TAG. The AKNG SEEM does not perform site visits on a regular basis to the geographically-separated facilities (i.e., Ft Greely, 168th ARW or Clear AFS). Finally, the Team noted that the AKNG SEEM was behind in completing a mandatory EEO report,[21] which was due in March 2014.

The Team found the failure to track EEO/EO complaints and/or complete the regulatory reporting requirements may be perceived to demonstrate a lack of commitment to the EEO/EO program.

The Alaska Army National Guard (AKARNG) Equal Opportunity Program is regulated by NGR 600-21, which requires a Human Resource Equal Opportunity Officer (HR/EO) at the JFHQ level and an Equal Opportunity Advisor (EOA) at every O-6 level of command; these individuals attend mandatory training at DEOMI. The AKARNG has had three different HR/EO's assigned in the past three years; the current individual is deployed for one year and has not been to DEOMI training. Per the aforementioned guidance, the AKARNG should have five trained EOAs; however, they currently have three EOAs, one of whom is leaving the service and one is currently deployed. This creates a problem for individuals who seek assistance with complaints of discrimination and for commanders trying to implement an effective program. Commanders simply cannot meet the mandatory EEO/EO training requirements without trained EOAs.

The Alaska Air National Guard (AKANG) Equal Opportunity Program is directed by ANGI 36-7. The Team interviewed an ANG Wing Military Equal Opportunity Officer (MEO) and EO NCOIC. Three informal reports were pending at the time of the Team's assessment. The Team learned that there were hostile climate issues within the AKANG, but that few people had come forward to file complaints. Interviews with members of both Wings reported a general pattern of inappropriate behavior that was not being addressed by the leadership. Allegations included the public display of nude pictures, sexual innuendo and inappropriate touching occurring within the workplace.

While funding to certify ARNG and ANG EEO/EO representatives through DEOMI or NGB-EO was available, overall support for the program was not evident to the Team at the various echelons of command. Several individuals interviewed expressed concern that the EEO/EO program is getting lost in the mix of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and Inspector General (IG) sensing sessions that were initiated by the AKNG at the request of the TAG to focus on climate issues (EO and SAPR were not participants in the IG sessions). They further believed that personnel are missing the underlying message regarding appropriate conduct in a professional environment.

Additionally witnesses stated that EEO/EO issues brought out during sensing sessions with the TAG and Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army are not forwarded to the AKNG SEEM for resolution; and that the SEEM does not review the command climate surveys being conducted and, as a consequence, cannot provide guidance to AKNG leadership on possible solutions to issues raised within these surveys.

C. Analysis of Fraud

The Team reviewed reported incidents of fraud that had occurred over the past 10 years. Most of the incidents involved the improper use of the government travel or purchase card. One incident involved the embezzlement of money from a NG family programs account and another incident involved the misconduct of a senior officer who misused federal equipment and personnel for his own personal gain. In each instance the Team noted that there was a lack of oversight in the AKNG to prevent and detect fraud when it occurred.

The Team learned of recent concerns over program expenditures related to personnel and facilities that became the focus of a July 2013 internal review audit, which was scheduled at the request of the United States Property and Fiscal Officer (USPFO).[22] The audit reviewed the operational controls used to administer the federal operations and maintenance agreement and found that those controls were lacking.[23]

[22] DoD previously determined it was unable to provide federal funding directly to a state's Governor/Adjutant General because, as state officials, they could not be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds. Section 708 of

The audit recommended that the AKNG establish additional compensating controls and realign internal controls to increase federal oversight and control.[24] The audit also found that the Alaska Division of Military & Veterans Affairs (DMVA) altered the federal internal controls making AKNG operations reliant on DMVA's internal control system, which violated federal regulatory requirements.[25]

The internal review found that while the claims for reimbursement under the Cooperative Agreement were valid, the agreement lacked adequate internal controls.

Following the audit Alaska improved their system of accounting for the work performed.[26] However, the oversight of the federal program managers and the base civil engineers continues to be an issue. The Team was provided with a number of examples where program oversight was lacking due to the supervisory relationship

Title 32, United States Code, therefore established the position known as the United State Property & Fiscal Officer (USPFO), which can be held statutorily accountable for the proper use and accounting of federal property and funds within the National Guard of a particular state

[23] Under a standard Facilities Operations and Maintenance Activities appendix, the state employees are paid to perform identified jobs and their pay is covered under a cost share relationship between federal and state authorities, and the employees take technical direction from Federal Program Managers for management of priorities, time, and funding accountability. According to the audit, in AK the state employees are managed through a consolidated labor pool. In theory this arrangement could result in cost savings. However, it relies on accurate accounting mechanisms and oversight to ensure that work is being performed and reimbursed which the audit found to be insufficient. The audit noted that the Federal Program Manager was responsible for an activity over which he had limited control noting, "The Federal Program Manager's role has been diminished to an extent that reasonable assurance may not be determined by the Federal Program Manager without additional compensating controls being implemented." AK ANG Audit FY13.

[24] The DMVA (State of Alaska) now submits a consolidated labor pool statement for each reimbursement request that shows how personnel costs are being charged and access to the real-time payroll database. This allows the Base Civil Engineer (BCE) and Facilities manager the ability to review input to ensure that personnel are not being charged to other accounts for the same time or service.

between state and federal employees and the centralized employment pool. Examples included the scheduling of leave without coordinating with the base civil engineer which interfered with federal project accomplishment through operational delay. Additionally, in one instance a state employee attempted to lease federal property to a state agency without proper federal coordination. The matter was reported to the federal program manager just in time for them to intervene, but the incident exemplified the lack of oversight in this area. Increased oversight and adequate internal controls are essential to the detection and prevention of fraud in the future.

D. Analysis of Coordination with Law Enforcement

The Team noted the AKNG did not track matters referred to local law enforcement for disposition. When information regarding referred matters was requested by the Team, the information had to be pulled together by personnel familiar with the allegations, or via connections to local law enforcement entities. The resulting civilian dispositions of the referred actions were varied. In some cases no formal charges were made and the conduct which gave rise to the investigation went unaddressed. Had these cases been tracked and the information regarding the misconduct been received by the command, the leadership would have been able to monitor the disposition of the alleged misconduct by local law enforcement and may have been able to take more timely appropriate disciplinary action where a nexus between the conduct and military good order and discipline existed.

The Team met with federal and state local law enforcement personnel in Anchorage to discuss misconduct within the AKNG. Additionally, the Team spoke telephonically with state law enforcement investigators throughout the state.

Improved lines of communication with law enforcement will improve good order and discipline within the AKNG

The Anchorage Police noted they do not inquire whether or not the subject of an investigation is a member of the AKNG as a matter of course, and while service members are nominally required to report to their command if they are arrested, there is no mechanism in place that would ensure this actually occurs. As a result, commanders may be unaware of misconduct committed by some service members outside of military installations.

The Team discussed with the AK law enforcement personnel the possibility of annotating when military personnel are investigated. It was determined that an additional data field could be added to the standard AK police report, although such action would be a change in their normal business practice.

The Team met with Army CID to discuss prior AKNG allegations that they had investigated. These included investigations of sexual assault, drug sales and trafficking of federal weapons, all of which were closed due to lack of sufficient evidence. Though significant numbers of AKNG personnel in Anchorage perform duties on a federal installation, there is little coordination or information sharing between the Active Component military and the AKNG.

The Team noted that several of the service members interviewed were under investigation by law enforcement, and at least one was serving probation while serving in an active duty status. This creates a perception that the AKNG leadership is either unaware or unconcerned about misconduct that is occurring in the ranks. Several witnesses perceived that while leadership was aware of misconduct, they have allowed members to serve because the operational mission is more important than the quality of the force or because of the wrongdoer's personal connections to the leadership.

E. Analysis of AKNG Misconduct

To assess misconduct within the AKNG, the Team requested copies of all reported misconduct and subsequent disposition (administrative and criminal) for the AKNG full-time and part-time personnel over the past 10 years. In analyzing the information provided by the AKNG, there were 494 reports of misconduct, of which 265 were cases of urinalyses failures, 62 cases were alcohol-related violations (such as DUI), 37 cases involved sexual assault (17 were unrestricted), 64 cases were reported as civilian criminal misconduct (such as assault), 15 cases were designated as general misconduct, 24 cases were EO-related, 3 cases involved fraud, and 27 other cases involved military misconduct. The Team noted there was a lack of consistency in the tracking of various cases that are reported to the command; there is also a lack of consistent punishment for like offenses.

With regard to matters that primarily involved the AKARNG, most allegations of misconduct were investigated pursuant to Army Regulation 15-6. Allegations involving AKANG members were typically investigated by

Commander-Directed Investigations (CDI) pursuant to the SAF IG CDI Guide.[27] With the exception of the alleged embezzlement of funds from the AKNG family programs fund in 2011, specific allegations of fraud were internally reviewed. While several instances of misconduct were investigated by the applicable MCIO or local law enforcement, there was little evidence that the AKNG maintained situational awareness of these matters. At the time of the Team's assessment, some matters were still being reviewed by local law enforcement and/or the Federal Bureau of Investigation and, therefore, were not the subject of substantive review by the Team.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the AKNG Recruiting and Retention Command. Several command directed investigations initiated in 2012 found that, during the time period of 2008-2009, several non-commissioned officers within this command were engaged in misuse of government vehicles, fraud, adultery, inappropriate relationships and sexual assault. Several of these cases are pending administrative action.

The Team's interviews conducted with the FBI, CID and local law enforcement revealed that the Recruiting and Retention Command had been the target of multiple investigations for crimes such as weapons smuggling, rape, and drug trafficking; however, none of these investigations resulted in prosecution of the crimes under investigation due to jurisdictional issues or lack of evidence.

The Team noted a high level of misconduct occurring within the Recruiting and Retention Command 2008-2009. Some of this misconduct is now the subject of administrative action.

The Team learned that during the time period investigated, the Recruiting and Retention Command commander reported directly to the AK TAG. This was a deviation from the normal reporting chain of AKNG units in comparison to both his predecessor and successor in command. This arrangement may not be optimal.

Recruiting and retention is strongly emphasized in the AKNG. Successful leaders are measured by their ability to both recruit and retain personnel. In some cases within the AKANG, promotions were tied to recruiting and retention numbers (e.g., unit vacancy promotion could not be utilized unless the Wing was at 95% strength). Additionally, high operational tempo requires the availability of all hands to support ongoing operations in AK. This created a perception that quantity was valued over quality, creating a disincentive to remove problem personnel who were otherwise operationally capable employees. Some Army and Air National Guard witnesses testified that when they approached the leadership regarding misconduct, they were specifically told to stand down.

The Recruiting and Retention commander was reported to be the TAG's friend and neighbor, creating a perception that this commander was invulnerable. This led to questions of the TAG's potential bias and favoritism toward the commander. The Team did not investigate the validity of these allegations.[28]

The Team reviewed a prior investigation into allegations of inappropriate contact between a recruiting member and a student at local high school involved with the JROTC program. The Team conducted several interviews with high school administrators to evaluate these programs but found no known current deficiencies within the program. The school's administration appeared to be generally satisfied with the JROTC and recruiting programs and was unaware of any misconduct.

F. Command Climate Survey

The Team conducted a Command Climate Survey using DEOCS, a Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute based survey tool, from 1 April 2014 until 1 June 2014. The AKNG has a total of 3954 assigned personnel; Army - 1913 and Air - 2041. A total of 1011 personnel or 25.5% of the AKNG completed the OCI Command Climate Survey; Army – 541 at 28.2% and Air – 470 at 23.02%. The Team was told by numerous individuals that they had participated in multiple surveys during the past year and that they were suffering from survey fatigue. The Team learned that there were surveys from commanders, the IG, the NGB Diversity Office, major commands and various other organizations.

[28]According to AR 20-1 paragraph 7-1l, commanders or IGs must forward directly to the Department of the Army Inspector General's Investigations Division, through IG channels, any and all allegations of impropriety or misconduct (including criminal allegations) against senior officials—defined as general officers (including ARNGUS, USAR, and retired general officers), promotable colonels, and SES civilians—within 2 working days of receipt.

1. Climate Survey: Sexual Assault and Safe Environments

While the intent of command climate survey is to provide information to commanders that they can use to improve their command, the Team did not intend to share the results of the survey until after the Team's assessment was complete. However the survey was shared with the AKNG leadership as part of DEOMI's normal protocol. Individuals that participated should report any concerns of retaliation as a result of their candid participation in the survey to NGB-JA/OCI.

The OCI climate survey included several questions regarding Sexual Assault, perceptions of safety, and the overall Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program. Within the AKANG, a significant number of respondents perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, citing social retaliation, lack of confidence in the leadership and military justice, and lack of privacy which reflects a lack of trust within the command (See Table 1-1). Members of the AKARNG also perceived barriers to reporting sexual assaults, citing lack of confidence in their command and lack of confidence in the military justice system (See Tables 1 and 2).

When asked who can or cannot receive a restricted report of sexual assault, more than 25% of respondents answered that Criminal Investigators or Military Police were able to accept a Restricted Report, which is incorrect. This information indicates that, while the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program is being briefed to soldiers and airmen, there is still confusion when it comes too restricted vs. unrestricted reporting options.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

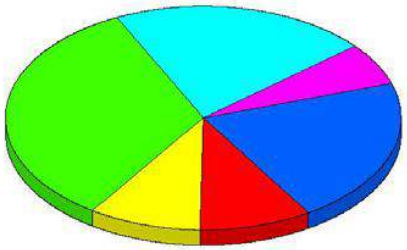
2. Climate Survey: Perceptions of Discrimination

The climate survey reflects 200 incidents of perceived discrimination or sexual harassment during the past twelve months.[29] Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy. Retaliation, gender-based (sexual) harassment and discrimination based on national origin were ranked high among the soldiers and airmen who responded. Of the AKARNG respondents faced with the question, "Within the past 12 months, I have personally experienced an incident of discrimination or sexual harassment within my current organization," 37 said they had been retaliated against, 29 indicated that they had been harassed based on gender and 28 claimed discrimination based on race/national origin.

Respondents to the OCI Survey revealed 200 incidents of perceived discrimination and sexual harassment during the past twelve months. Discriminatory categories include discrimination based on race/national origin/color, gender (sex), religion, age, disability, equal pay, genetic information, and pregnancy.



Although the AKANG numbers were significantly lower overall, the same areas of concern were highlighted; 11 respondents stated they were harassed based on gender (sex), nine perceived retaliation, six respondents reported discrimination based on religion and five respondents reported discrimination based on race/national origin. A total of 26 men and 14 women responded that they were harassed based on gender. When queried "Did you report any of the incidents of discrimination to someone in your organization," 57 of those that responded did not report the incident to anyone; 35 members stated the barriers to their reporting included "Fear of reprisal," followed by 27 stating "Lack of support from command."

3. Trusting the Leadership

The survey included several areas designed to evaluate: Organizational Effectiveness, Trust in Leadership, and Unit Cohesion. Ten locally-developed questions were asked to evaluate the different echelons of AKNG command. The survey results indicate a lack of trust within the leadership of the AKNG. The organizational effectiveness factors chart reflects male officers and senior enlisted members of the Air Wings and Units fall behind the national average for trusting leadership to manage their organization. The same chart reflects a lack of trust of leadership at all levels of the AKNG.

Overall, the survey reveals a perception of lack of leadership integrity within all levels of command, to include handling of disciplinary actions, favoritism, and communication as well as issues regarding the results from various selection boards.

There is a perception that individuals who file complaints will be exposed to retaliation; 23% of individuals who participated in the survey stated they had been exposed to this behavior. When asked "What are the Barriers to Reporting Discrimination," 35% of respondents stated they would not report based on fear of reprisal. The Team interprets this to mean that soldiers and airmen are truly concerned by what they have witnessed in the organization.

35% of Survey respondents stated they would not report discrimination based on fear of reprisal.

The responses to the OCI Command Climate Survey were consistent with the comments made in the 22 other surveys provided to the Team for review. While these surveys were being conducted at the unit level, this indicates that the issues addressed above should not be new to the leadership. When properly utilized, climate surveys assist the commanders in identifying and reinforcing practices where they have succeeded in meeting or exceeding the national average. Issues where the unit falls below the national average, however, should be treated as an organizational concern that should be identified and addressed.

V. Additional Matters

Though not specifically identified in the Governor's request for an assessment, the Team identified the following additional matters in the AKNG that have contributed to the issues that gave rise to this inquiry.

A. Administration and Management of Justice

Most of the AKNG officers and senior enlisted members cited the inaccessibility of adequate military justice advice as a major barrier to effectively addressing misconduct, with the focus resting squarely on the Joint Force Headquarter Staff Judge Advocate (JFHQ SJA) who serves as the senior National Guard attorney and TAG's personal legal advisor for AKNG matters. Witnesses found her confusing and frustrating to deal with. They reported that questions provided to her were either left unanswered or the answers were so convoluted that they were of little value. While no one questioned her intelligence, personal commitment to the AKNG, or dedication to an ethical climate, they often questioned her legal advice; as a result, they reported to the Team that they and others avoided the JFHQ SJA altogether.

The JFHQ SJA had no apparent case tracking system. There was a handwritten log designed to track requests for legal review, but the legal staff did not routinely monitor its use. The log evidenced receipt, but no disposition, of just one administrative discharge action within the preceding four years. Additionally, the JFHQ had no visibility on the Army or Air National Guard legal matters, despite the fact that several of these matters would ultimately involve TAG action. Several witnesses described requests for legal review that often went unanswered. Additionally, the JFHQ SJA does not provide supervision or oversight over Army or Air matters.

The Team learned that the JFHQ SJA recently had coordinated with the State of Washington's SJA office to provide legal review of a number of AKNG Army investigations. Although impartiality was cited as the reason for the request, this further distanced the JFHQ SJA from the performance of actual legal support to AKNG units.

The AKNG operates over a very large geographic area and the limited number of JAs, both Army and Air, is not optimal. Increasing the number of JAs should lead to enhanced good order and discipline.

Notwithstanding the issues within the JFHQ SJA legal office, the quality of the Judge Advocate (JA) team is very high; recently, the AKARNG hired a full time, dual status military technician to provide daily legal support. This junior officer is currently managing several high visibility disciplinary boards and is very capable, yet significantly overworked. His military supervisor, the ARNG State SJA (a part-time guardsman), was taking appropriate steps to provide technical oversight; however, he is unable to provide hands-on assistance. In addition, the AKARNG does not participate in the Army National Guard's Trial Defense Counsel Program, and as a result relies on JAs from the lower 48 states to provide defense counsel when administrative action occurs.

The Team noted that, although there was an increase in misconduct that occurred at Ft Greely, there was no local part-time SJA assigned to assist the leadership at that location. While one JA was physically present on Ft Greely in his civilian capacity during weekdays, he commutes several hours to JBER on weekends to serve as a JA. Accordingly, legal support to Ft Greely, provided remotely, was less than optimal.

The Air National Guard JAs function as self-contained Wings at JBER (176 WG) and Eielson AFB (168 ARW). The 168 ARW maintains the Air National Guard component's only geographically separated unit (GSU) – the 213 SWS at Clear Air Force Station (AFS). Despite the fact that both Wings maintain robust 24/7/365 Title 10 and Title 32 operational missions, the Wings only have part-time JA positions authorized. There are two JAs at the 168 ARW neither of which currently practices law outside their Air National Guard positions; as such, they are generally accessible between drills. At the 176th WG the SJA is a highly-qualified but with his civilian employment he has little time between drills to tend to the Wing's operational and administrative demands. A new JA fills the deputy SJA position and, upon return from training, his presence should greatly assist in the swift processing of actions. Other then volume of work, there did not appear to be tracking problems or unique challenges for the JAs within the Air National Guard Wings.

The AKNG members serving in a Title 32 or State Active Duty Status are subject to state criminal law. For an analysis of Justice in the Military see Appendix C. Alaska's Code of Military Justice (ACMJ) expressly withholds jurisdiction for any crime that can be tried by civil authorities.[30] Therefore, "common law" crimes such as rape, indecent exposure/touching, and all other assaults cannot be criminally prosecuted under the ACMJ – but must instead be referred to civilian authorities. This leaves only inherently military offenses – such as insubordination, malingering, asleep at post, drunk on duty to be tried by military courts martial under the ACMJ. As a result, AKNG commanders instead rely upon administrative action to address misconduct.

Commanders currently have the ability to administratively separate, demote, and issue reprimands to enlisted members.[31] There are few administrative measures available to address officers involved in misconduct. The most common tool used in AK was the letter of reprimand with an occasional withdrawal of federal recognition as the only real and immediate consequence for officer misconduct.[32] The Team noted a general lack of understanding regarding the permanency of officially filed letters of reprimand; as a result, several letters that had been permanently filed were erroneously removed from officer's personnel files in contradiction to Army and National Guard policy.[33] Meanwhile other locally filed letters of reprimand with an annotated expiration date of 2-3 years should have been removed, but they were still in the service members' personnel files at the time of the assessment.

Administrative Action is the primary tool for commanders to restore order and discipline within their ranks but it must be swift and it must be lawful. As the processing of what appeared to the Team to be routine administrative matters lagged so did the confidence in the State Judge Advocate. The climate survey reflected this concern with 28% of the AKANG and 42% of the AKARNG respondents listing "lack of confidence in the military justice system" as a barrier to reporting sexual assault.

B. Ethical Misconduct

The Team reviewed multiple allegations of ethical misconduct by commissioned and noncommissioned officers in the AKNG. As senior leader ethics continue to be a predominant concern across the Department of [31] See AR 135-178/NGR 600-200.

[32] See NGR 635-101, Officer Withdrawal of Federal Recognition.

[33] AR 600-37, paragraphs 7-1 and 7-2, provide that appeals and petitions for removal of unfavorable information be directed to the Department of the Army Suitability and Evaluation Board (DASEB) for action, States cannot unilaterally elect to remove information regardless of what the letter states or the officer giving the letter intended. The subject of the letter has the burden to provide evidence of a clear and convincing nature that the allegations are untrue or unjust, in whole or in part, thereby warranting removal. See also ARNG-HRZ Memorandum for Military personnel Management Officers of All States DTD 29 July 2013 Authority for Removal of IPERMs Documents (PPOM #13-028).

Defense, the Team examined leadership behavior and met with the Department of the Army Inspector General (DAIG) to review prior investigative findings as they related to the AKNG leadership.

The climate survey and interviews conducted by the Team highlighted a lack of trust of the leadership based on perceived instances of favoritism and bias by the senior leadership when responding to substantiated allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraud.

As one example, the DAIG substantiated violations of federal ethical standards by a former AKNG official. The DAIG found that, over a period of several years, the officer had inappropriately used government vehicles, to include helicopters, for personal use. The Team was also informed that this same official had improperly interrogated a victim of sexual assault and exercised bias in the administration of personnel matters. Many individuals interviewed by the Team blamed the current TAG for failing to take administrative action against the former AKNG official after learning of the DAIG findings against the officer.[34]

Substantiated complaints made against one officer resulted in no administrative action; the officer retired at his current rank and, upon retirement, was awarded the Legion of Merit.

The Team reviewed three voluminous investigations conducted at Ft. Greely regarding allegations of inappropriate relationships and fraternization.[35] At JBER the Team received information that multiple individuals within the JFHQ were engaged in inappropriate relationships, were involved in adulterous

[34] Available administrative remedies would have included but not be limited to Withdrawal of Federal Recognition or Grade Determination Board.

[35] Air Force Instruction 36-2909, paragraph 5, provides: "Unprofessional relationships between officers and enlisted members have a high potential for damaging morale and discipline and for compromising the standing of officers. Consequently, officers have an ethical and a legal obligation to avoid certain relationships and activities. Officers must not engage in any activity with an enlisted member that reasonably may prejudice good order and discipline, discredit the armed forces or compromise an officer's standing. The custom against fraternization in the Air Force extends beyond organizational and chain of command lines. In short, it extends to all officer/enlisted relationships." Army policy requires Commanders "seek to prevent inappropriate or unprofessional relationships through proper training and Leadership by example." AR 600-20, paragraph 4-14f.) Accordingly, commanders have the authority and the responsibility to maintain good order, discipline and morale within their units.

affairs, and that some members solicited other members, regardless of position or rank.

Interviews with senior leaders about these allegations revealed they were often aware of the allegations; however, the TAG believed that the AKNG was "not the morality police." Therefore, allegations of inappropriate conduct were not addressed until the conduct rose to the level that necessitated leadership involvement. Some individuals asserted that leadership only took action when individuals involved fell out of favor with the current leadership. The Team noted that, while commanders and other officers or senior enlisted members had been reprimanded for inappropriate relationships or behavior, they were typically allowed to retire at their current grade or simply relocated within the AKNG for continued service. One officer, who had been reprimanded twice for fraternization and adultery, is currently the subject of a reported sexual assault.

VI. Findings

A. Finding 1: Sexual Assault. The current AKNG's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is well organized but lacks the trust of victims due to their lack of confidence in the command.

1) The Team found there was a clear lapse in appropriate military victim services prior to 2012. There were several instances where victim complaints were not properly documented, victims did not receive accurate information regarding their reporting options, victims were not referred to victim advocates, confidentiality was not provided, and in some cases the victims were ostracized by their leaders, peers and units.

2) The Team found that all of the victims that have reported assault through the AKNG Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program since 2012 appear to have been properly advised as to the availability of services and have been referred, when permitted, to law enforcement entities for investigation. Additionally, medical and counseling services, both military and civilian, have been made available to all documented National Guard victims of sexual assault since 2006.

3) The Team found continued improvement is needed in the following four areas:

a. Protection of victim's confidential information – Victims had reported instances where their confidential information was discussed publically and instances where information regarding their assault was provided in such a manner that they could be, and in some cases were, easily identified as the victims.

b. Offender Accountability – Victims interviewed stated they lacked confidence that their leadership would pursue disciplinary action in their case and reviews of disciplinary actions supported their conclusion.

c. Leadership understanding of Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative options - Victims that had worked with the current Sexual Assault Response Coordinator were generally satisfied with the support they were receiving from the program, but many were concerned about reprisal from their command and described instances where their command over reached, re-victimizing them in the process.

d. Knowledge of sexual assault reporting options - Individuals that participated in the OCI Command Climate Survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

Finding 2: EEO/EO Programs. The AKNG Leadership failed to provide the resources, emphasis, and oversight in the implementation of the AKNG EEO/EO program

1) The Team found that the lack of senior leadership support weakened the AKNG understanding of the EEO/EO policies and resulted in the inconsistent handling of EEO/EO complaints by leaders across the AKNG, which has contributed to the perception that leaders do not support EEO/EO policies and may engage in reprisal. Command emphasis is critical to provide a forum to address complaints and develop preventative programs to prevent future complaints from occurring.

2) This finding is broken down further as follows:

a. The Senior Leadership is not providing sufficient support for the EEO/EO program. State National Guard EEO/EO programs must include a well trained and accessible State Equal Employment Manager with strong leadership emphasis and support. The Team noted that the EEO/EO program within the organization was not well integrated within their units. Many of the EEO/EO offices were located in areas that were not easily accessible or lacked confidentiality and lacked appropriate contact information when unavailable, thereby inhibiting complaints.[36]

b. The State Equal Employment Manager was not actively managing the EEO/EO program and was not providing oversight as required by NGB policy. The Team noted that the State Equal Employment Manager did not have direct access to the TAG and other levels of command, which resulted in missed opportunities to foster regular discussion of and attention to EEO/EO matters within the workplace.

[36] The Team noted that the 176th MEO Office was hard to find, there were no posters directing personnel, and due to its location inside an old commissary building with the ANG LRS unit it provided little confidentiality for the few that sought EO assistance.

(i) Pursuant to NGR 600-22, the State Equal Employment Manager is the custodian of record for discrimination complaint files and related records. The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager appeared to be unaware of most of the complaints that had been made across the state. The OCI Command Climate Survey revealed that, of the 200 incidents wherein respondents reported they had been the subject of harassment/discrimination in the past year, only 35 actually made a report of harassment or discrimination and the State Equal Employment Manager only had documentation for three of these incidents.

(ii) The Team received multiple reports during their onsite interviews of sexual harassment and discrimination that had not been reported to EEO/EO program managers. In some cases the leadership was familiar with the issues but, as no formal complaints had been filed, they were not seeking resolution or prioritizing efforts to address the overall climate. As a result, the issues persisted without leadership intervention.

(iii) Without active monitoring, emphasis, and oversight the EEO/EO managers were unable to gain leadership support for training and resources and the State Equal Employment Manager was unable to identify any trends or problems that required leadership attention.

c. The AKNG EEO/EO program does not have sufficient number of personnel to meet the requirements for the program as established under current policy.

(i) Pursuant to NGB 600-21, the ARNG must have one Human Resources Employment Officer (HR EO) who runs the ARNG program on the part-time state side and one Equal Opportunity Advisor per 0-6 level of command; all of which must be Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute trained. There was a great deal of turnover in the HR EO position and the current HR EO, who lacks requisite DEOMI training, is currently deployed. In the ARNG there are five 0-6 level commands, however only three EOAs are assigned, one of which is currently pending adverse administrative action.

(ii) Pursuant to Air Force Instruction 36-2706, each Air National Guard Wing is required to have an Equal Opportunity Director (officer) and a NCOIC with support provided to the geographically separated units.

Additionally, Military Employment Opportunity (MEO) program managers should not be assigned additional duties that interfere with their MEO responsibilities. In the AKNG there are two Air National Guard Wings and one geographically isolated unit. The Team found that while they met the staffing requirement, the Wings were not supporting their geographically isolated unit. Additionally, the MEO at one Wing was commuting quarterly from Virginia; and prior to that, from Korea making her inaccessible to service members during standard drill periods, when a complainant would have the opportunity to make their complaint or seek assistance.

d. Finally, AKNG Service members do not trust that their leadership will properly address EEO/EO complaints. OCI command climate survey respondents and witnesses interviewed communicated this to the Team during interviews. Thirty five Survey respondents had not filed a complaint due to "fear of reprisal" and twenty seven respondents stated "lack of support from command" as the primary barriers to reporting. When interviewed, the EEO/EO program managers admitted they did not enforce the requirement that leadership complete the Command Reprisal Prevention Plan as required by NGB policy and did not discuss actions that could be considered reprisal with the unit commander.

C. Finding 3: Coordination with Law Enforcement. The AKNG does not have a formal mechanism to facilitate the coordination of AKNG service member misconduct with local law enforcement.

1) Without an established coordination relationship, commanders do not have information regarding new and ongoing cases of criminal misconduct. In some cases this lack of knowledge allowed service members to remain on full time operational orders while they were under criminal investigation by local law enforcement. This reinforced the perception that the AKNG leadership was unconcerned with the misconduct, and as a result fewer reports of misconduct were made.

2) Interviews revealed that commanders either relied on information provided to them by the offender or scanned open source materials such as Alaska Court System CourtView online, a web based record of AK court matters, to gather updated information about their service members. This is not an adequate substitute for coordination with local law enforcement.

D. Finding 4: Fraud. The AKNG had several instances where fraud had occurred as well as a perception of fraud occurring at the facilities level; however, this fraud was not found to have impacted the reporting of sexual assault.

1) The Team notes that fraudulent and unethical behavior leads to a lack of confidence and trust in senior leadership, and this is a key component to victim reporting behavior. There were two specific instances where well-known fraudulent activity had occurred, neither of which were connected to sexual misconduct. The issues were investigated by organizations outside of the AKNG, and some level of administrative action and or criminal prosecution had occurred. In both instances, there was a perception that senior leaders either endorsed or neglected actions that allowed the fraud to occur. The Team notes, however, that the AKNG has demonstrated an improved emphasis to target fraud which was evident in their active internal review program which detects and prevents fraudulent activity.

2) The Team also found there is currently a concern over the management of state employees under the cooperative agreement's Facilities Operations and Maintenance Agreement (FOMA) and a perception that the lack of federal oversight violated federal law and policy. The Team reviewed the internal review that was conducted on the Alaska Air National Guard in 2013 which specifically addressed the above areas as issues that needed to be corrected and called for "attributable" controls to be put in place. Interviews with the USPFO revealed that the recommendations have been largely implemented and that the current accounting system is now auditable. However, the Team lacked the subject matter expertise to ensure that these changes are being implemented.

E. Finding 5: Command Climate. The climate survey highlighted the fact that actual and perceived favoritism, ethical misconduct, and fear of reprisal are eroding the trust and confidence in the leadership of the AKNG.

1) The Team found that some of the AKNG senior leadership lacked a true open door policy.[37] An open door policy is meant to encourage subordinate members to raise issues or concerns they have which they believe they cannot address within their current chain of command. The open door policy is generally published and available for members in the unit to view. The Team noted that in some instances the open door policy required the service member to schedule the meeting through their current leadership, or it provided that once scheduled the meeting would include their current leadership. While each commander sets his own open door policies, this practice was counterproductive as members reported they were dissuaded from raising issues they believed they could not resolve within the command. Additionally, as is traditionally the case, the senior leader's policy will inform the junior leader's policy which has had a cascading effect upon the force in Alaska.

2) The Team found that the AKNG does not have a strong mentoring program. Junior commanders stated they did not receive senior level guidance or mentoring and that there was no venue available that would encourage the sharing of ideas and information and to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. This was also true within the different support organizations such as personnel, legal, and EEO/EO.

3) The Team found there was a perception that the members of the Recruiting and Retention Command received preferential treatment. There was a history of reports of criminal misconduct coming from the Recruiting and Retention Command which was not timely investigated creating an impression for several witnesses of favoritism, bias, complacency, or delay of justice. The AKNG leadership had received complaints in 2010 of criminal activity that included inappropriate relationships, fraudulent use of government equipment, adultery and sexual assault. These allegations were not investigated by the AKNG until December 2012. Individuals involved in this misconduct are currently the subject of several disciplinary boards. Though many individuals interviewed were aware of the recent disciplinary boards, witnesses expressed doubt that the TAG will approve results that recommend unfavorable action against members of this command.

4) The Team also found there is a lack of transparency in the personnel management system. Members interviewed were confused about the various promotion requirements and roles of various senior leaders in the process. Additionally, there was no structured mentoring program or regular command/special branch meetings that would provide a venue to discuss misconduct, EO/EEO, promotions, appropriate ethical conduct, etc. In the absence of such a venue, junior leaders and advisors are not receiving the leadership emphasis needed for personnel programs (such as EEO\EO) and are not benefiting from the experience of their leaders which has adversely impacted the perceptions of junior and senior leaders. Many interviewees perceived that favoritism was occurring, when in many cases appropriate and thoughtful personnel decisions were being made.

5) The Team found there was a perception that the AKNG leadership, to include the TAG, were engaged in ethical and moral misconduct and therefore they lacked the moral high ground to take appropriate action when disciplinary matters arose. This perception was articulated during personal interviews and documented in the OCI Command Climate Survey. The Team, however, does not have the authority to investigate misconduct by senior government officials (O-6 promotable and general officers) as such, all allegations were referred to the appropriate service investigative body. While the Team did not investigate these allegations, the Team found the allegations pervasive; as a result, whether the allegations are accurate or not, this perception must be addressed in order to restore faith and confidence in the AKNG leadership.

6) The "Overall Unit Summary" in the OCI Command Climate Survey shows the AKNG falls at or below the National Guard average in most of the categories assessed. Notwithstanding these numbers, the survey does not reflect a broken AKNG, merely one that needs administrative and "corporate culture" improvement while maintaining its current high level of operational capability. Issues remain regarding fear of reprisal, lack of accountability and lack of confidence in the AKNG leadership based on the interviews conducted and documentation collected by the Team.

7) The Team found that AKNG commanders are not providing consistent support to victims of discrimination and sexual assault. Several victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment stated they were ostracized by their unit after reporting their experience. Many of these victims continue to receive counseling because of the reprisal they believe they experienced. The failure to properly train and document reprisal, noted previously in the findings related to EO/EEO, greatly undermined the effective response of commanders.

VII. Additional Findings Regarding the Administration of Justice

The Team finds the AKNG is not properly administering justice through either the investigation or adjudication of AKNG member misconduct. While the administration of justice and personnel management is a command responsibility, several of the delays involved in the processing of administrative actions were directly attributed to AKNG management of legal support.

Due to challenges associated with the prosecution of offenses under the Alaska Code of Military Justice (ACMJ), commanders rely solely on administrative measures or tools to maintain order and discipline within their force. [38] In the AKNG, all of these tools appear to be used more or less appropriately, with two exceptions: removal from the AGR program and administrative discharges. The Team noted long delays and reluctance to use both AGR removal and administrative discharge processes.

The Team assessed each of the following as contributing to these problems: weak discipline imposed upon the force; a forgiving command climate; overly cautious and inexperienced commanders; a lack of experience in processing actions by subordinate commanders; and a lack of available legal counsel to advise commanders and investigating officers (IOs) or to conduct timely legal reviews for approval and imposition. Additionally there was a lack of an adequate action-tracking mechanism.[39]

Justice is both a senior leader and a SJA issue. Many of the delays the Team found seemed to be attributable to the office of the SJA and the chronic lack of staff with the mission of supporting what is in many regards an operational full-time force. Dating back to 2006, the Team found several examples of substandard members who were properly processed for administrative discharge, only to have discharge actions delayed indefinitely,

[38] These tools generally include: informal counseling; a written letter of counseling (LOC) or reprimand (LOR); annotating misconduct on a member's evaluation/performance report; withholding or delaying (or modifying) promotions; change in duty assignments, shift assignments or transfers; administrative demotion; removing active guard/reserve (AGR) members from their full-time orders; and, finally, administrative separation from the National Guard.

[39] The Director of the Joint Staff recently developed a tracking system and was holding monthly boards to gain better oversight increased awareness along these lines will improve her efforts.

unexecuted, re-characterized or re-examined by senior leadership. While senior leaders have the authority to take final action, which includes modifying final dispositions when they deem appropriate, there appeared to be a lack of transparency in these decisions, thereby undermining the integrity of the process.

Much of the delay in administrative discharge processing appears to be intertwined with state-imposed requirements which impede the processing of early termination of AGR orders.[40] When a National Guard member is recommended for removal from the AGR program, the member is entitled to due process. In many of the other states the member is given just a few days to respond – specifically, seven days in the ANG component and fifteen days in the ARNG component. If the member responds to contest the proposed removal, TAG decides whether or not removal/curtailment is appropriate. In the Air components, the member may appeal (again, to TAG), but the separation proceeds.

The AKNG's inability to utilize this force management tool is directly attributed to the Alaska Supreme Court case of State v. Bowen, 953 P.2d 888 (Alaska 1998). As a result of this case, the JFHQ SJA has advised commanders and unit-level judge advocates that whenever a member's misconduct is of sufficient severity that discharge is also warranted, a single, combined "adversarial hearing" should be held. This level of process requires lengthy delays to convene a hearing, during which time the member continues receiving a federal paycheck. As a consequence, these members, accused of misconduct, continue to perform duties, often with little more than "make-work" or "do-nothing" assignments. The Team heard very clearly from a number of interviewees that this perceived inability to remove full-time AGR members is hurting morale within the AKNG, creating a toxic work environment.

The team reviewed this case and recommends that the AK Attorney General's Office render an opinion, in coordination with the NGB Office of the [40] Under both Army National Guard regulation (NGR 600-5) and Air National Guard instruction (ANGI 36-101), probationary AGR members (generally those with fewer than six years' AGR service and less than 18 years total active federal military service, or TAFMS) are more easily removed than career AGR members (six or more years AGR or more than 18 years TAFMS); but career members may nonetheless be involuntary removed for cause whenever the facts and circumstances of their misconduct warrant removal.

Chief Counsel, pertaining to the applicability of State v. Bowen to AGR tour curtailment.

VIII. Recommendations

The Team makes recommendations to address the specific findings that have been addressed. Additionally, the Team makes separate recommendations for the administration of justice in the AKNG.

A. Recommendation 1: Sexual Assault. The Team has seven separate recommendations to improve the management of sexual assault matters within the AKNG.

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Continue the education of AKNG service members on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program, to include the availability of resources, advocates, counsel and information regarding confidential reporting options,

2) Improve the reporting process to ensure victims' information is kept confidential.

3) Ensure action taken in each of the cases investigated is shared with the victim through the VA program. Specific guidance is outlined and required by DoDI 6495.02.

4) Develop ways to provide transparent and informed justice regarding sexual assault matters, as well as other misconduct, to shift the culture from acceptance to accountability.

5) Reinforce leadership education on the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program and investigative resources available to the command.

6) Set the tone for sexual assault and harassment awareness by strengthening the policies that are meant to educate soldiers and airmen about respect and responsibility for one another.

7) The AKNG Sexual Assault Response Coordinator needs to reinforce training on reporting options with special emphasis on who can take a restricted report. Individuals that participated in the Team survey demonstrated an overall positive knowledge of the SAPR program; however, they did not understand the restricted reporting process.

B. Recommendation 2: EO Programs. The Team has five separate recommendations to improve the AKNG Equal Employment Opportunity program

The AKNG leadership needs to:

1) Reinforce the AKNG EEO/EO program to ensure individuals understand options in regards to privileged communications and protection from retaliation; visibly increasing leadership support is paramount.

2) Ensure their AKNG EEO/EO program includes well-trained and accessible EO Program participants. The SEEM must have direct access to TAG or the other levels of command in order to facilitate a discussion regarding EO within the workplace. Additionally, the EEO/EO program must be incorporated into leadership discussions such as the monthly Sexual Assault Review Board (SARB) in order to facilitate the exchange of information relevant to combating sexual assault and harassment.

3) Ensure the AKNG EEO/EO program meets or exceeds the personnel requirements for the program as established under current policy and that all EEO/EO personnel are trained and certified in accordance with Service guidelines. The Team further recommends that an EOA position be formally established at Ft Greely. Although Ft Greely is not an O-6 level command which would require a separate EOA, due to their remote location and the issues identified by the Team as highlighted in the analysis regarding disparate treatment, continued EO representation at that location is warranted.

4) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to receive additional training on her roles and responsibilities in order to improve current program oversight and case tracking.

5) The AKNG State Equal Employment Manager needs to conduct additional training on EEO/EO complaints management for senior leaders that includes training on creating a Command Reprisal Prevention Plan.

C. Recommendation 3. Coordination with Law Enforcement.

The Team recommends that all allegations of misconduct under investigation by local law enforcement be tracked by the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or a law enforcement liaison, such as a Provost Marshall Officer. Additionally when appropriate, the Staff Judge Advocate should make recommendations for administrative action pending the finding of local law enforcement officials, to include removal from the AGR program.

D. Recommendation 4: Fraud.

The Team recommends that the National Guard Bureau conduct a further assessment into the management of federal fiscal resources in the AKNG. Regarding the theft and misuse of federal resources by service members, the Team recommends that the AKNG continue its efforts to combat fraud through its current Internal Review program.

E. Recommendation 5: Climate. The Team has seven recommendations to address the concerns raised during the Team's assessment and through the OCI Command Climate Survey.

The AKNG Leadership needs to:

1) Review their open door policies across the command to ensure they are sending the right message that encourages reporting that provides a venue for members at all levels to raise issues and recommendations to the leadership in a way that is free of reprisal. The Team noted that the Leadership's open door policy was not truly open door.

2) Improve its mentoring program of officers across the state. Command update briefs provide a venue for the leadership to share their vision and for commanders to discuss challenges with personnel, mission and equipment. Therefore the Team recommends that the AKNG hold quarterly leader meetings. These meetings would be centered on areas of emphasis such as, commanders, personnel, EO, Legal, and Facilities Management, and these meetings would be joint between with both Army and Air National Guard participation. The meetings need not be in person; VTC and telephone bridges could be used so long as all members are provided the opportunity to openly discuss issues and educate each other regarding issues and challenges.

3) Reinforce, train, and educate on reprisal and retaliation policy. The Department of the Army recently issued guidance to the Army which prohibits retaliation for reporting a criminal offense and directs that investigations following the allegation occur either by the IG or within the command.[41] Such guidance should be reviewed and implemented by the AKNG.

4) Develop a level of transparency to reinforce the concept that justice is being pursued, specifically regarding actions that involve promotion and discipline.

5) Address the validity of claims of ethical and moral misconduct.

6) The AKNG senior leadership and second tier commands need to review the results of the OCI Command Climate Survey, specifically the recommendations for additional changes that can be made within their organizations. A break down for the individual sections surveyed is available upon request.

7) Focus on protecting victims of discrimination and sexual assault from being re-victimized and protect their identity.

[41] See Secretary of the Army Directive 2014-20, Prohibition of Retaliation Against Soldiers for Reporting Criminal Offense. Retaliation is defined as taking or threatening to take adverse or unfavorable personnel action, ostracism, which includes excluding from social acceptance privilege or friendship, and acts of cruelty, oppression and maltreatment.

IX. Additional Recommendations Regarding Military Justice

Recognizing the Team does not include members of the AK Bar, the Team identified eight areas that the AKNG and AK legislature may want to consider to improve the role of military justice within the state.

1) Review current military legal support to determine whether or not it is optimal to meet the needs of the AKNG.

2) Appoint an AKNG military judge and have one or more trained and certified at all times.

3) Participate in the Army National Guard Trial Defense program in order to meet the demands of defense support.

4) Enhance AKNG participation in the NG Special Victim Counsel Program in order to meet the needs of sexual assault victims through individual legal representation; consider requesting a full time NG SVC located within AK.

5) Coordinate with the State Attorney General on the proper interpretation of Bowen as it relates to the AKNG AGR removal process so as to enable commanders to swiftly remove members involved in misconduct from the full-time force.[42] Until the AKNG develops a process regarding AGR removal, the AKNG might consider holding a pre-termination hearing immediately as a precursor to convening an administrative discharge board.

6) Review and improve training for Commander Directed Investigations. Develop a smart book that will assist in advising investigators how to conduct investigations. Multiple Army Regulation 15-6 investigations at Ft. Greely did not uncover all the issues that started to surface at that installation; as a result, leadership was not able to obtain a full picture of the problems in time to interdict, train, and educate.

[42] It should be noted that removal from the AGR program is a force management tool but that removal itself does not provide "bad paper" and that the leadership must still follow the removal with appropriate adverse administrative action when warranted.

7) Create an action tracking system to improve oversight of all adverse administrative actions. This system (whether paper or electronic, centralized or decentralized) should include: the date of misconduct; the date it became known to leadership; the date an inquiry or investigation began, was completed and received a legal review (if an inquiry/investigation was necessary); the date the adverse administrative action was initiated; the date the documents and notice of adverse action are provided to the service member; the date an action arrives at the Joint Forces Headquarters (JFHQ) for processing; the date the action receives a legal review by the JFHQ SJA; and the date the action arrives at the Assistant Adjutant Generals Air and Army or TAG's desk for action, execution or appellate consideration.

8) Conduct a thorough review of AKNG personnel files to reinstate documents that were erroneously removed from official military personnel files and to remove locally filed letters which have exceeded their expiration date.

9) Review the existing Alaska state code to determine if it is optimally crafted to serve state needs regarding the AKNG.

X. Additional Allegations

Throughout the assessment, the Team received information regarding allegations of past misconduct that witnesses felt were unaddressed or improperly addressed by the leadership. In each case where specific information was provided, the Team sought any and all information related to the allegation and conducted personal interviews to ensure thoroughness in our review. When appropriate, these matters were brought to the direct attention of AKNG leadership for action. The Team noted that this misconduct was similar to the misconduct identified in the prior allegations, including allegations of fraud, adultery, sexual assault and reprisal occurring within other sections of the AKNG. While evidence pertaining to these additional allegations was not material to the Team's assessment, it provided context for the Team as we evaluated the veracity of the information that was collected as part of the main assessment. The recommendations enumerated above would also serve to address these new allegations as well as future misconduct. Finally, senior leader allegations of misconduct were referred to the applicable service IG.

XI. Investigator's Comments

The AKNG has been the subject of multiple inquiries and assessments, and as a result, the organization may be "over sensed." Commanders and junior members interviewed scoffed at the surveys, stating that initially they thought leadership wanted to know what the issues were, but after the members reported discontent on numerous assessments without any apparent change in the system, they gave up.

Guard members largely viewed the surveys and IG sensing sessions as ineffective and unproductive. However, the AKNG leadership believes these tools are providing them vital information needed to address AKNG needs. This has led to a misperception, whereby they AKNG leadership believe they are addressing soldier and airmen needs, but soldiers and airmen believe their leadership just does not care. This attitude is reflected in the relatively low number of respondents who elected to provide feedback in the Team's Climate Survey (i.e., AKARNG 28.2% response and AKANG 23.02% response).

It is important to review all sections contained in this report. Compare the information presented in Section III, Perceptions of Discrimination, Section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison, along with Appendix, Written Comments from Your Organization. Doing so can sometimes help to validate potential areas of concern.

I. HOW TO INTERPRET YOUR DEOCS RESULTS

1. Start by looking at the demographic breakout in Part II, which shows who completed the survey. The charts provide a visual display of respondents by their demographic features. Survey respondents can select any option when completing the demographic portion of the survey, so numbers may not match the personnel assigned. Determine if the participants represent the overall assigned population.

2. Review section III, Perceptions of Discrimination. This shows perceptions of these incidents in the workplace during the past 12 months, actions taken to address them, and members' satisfaction with issue resolution.

3. Review section IV, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR). This covers perceptions of leadership support, knowledge of sexual assault reporting options, perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, and bystander intervention climate.

4. Review section V, which provides climate factor results broken out by demographic subgroup, facilitating direct comparison between complementary groups. Higher averages reflect more positive ratings. Results are displayed using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively reflecting above average, average, and below average.

5. Review section VI, Overall Unit Summary. This provides a comparative analysis for each of the factor areas, comparing your unit's current average with its parent Service branch. Results are displayed using the same color coding scheme.

6. Review section VII, which shows responses to the individual climate factor questions

7. Review section VIII, which shows provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report.

8. Review responses to Locally Developed Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

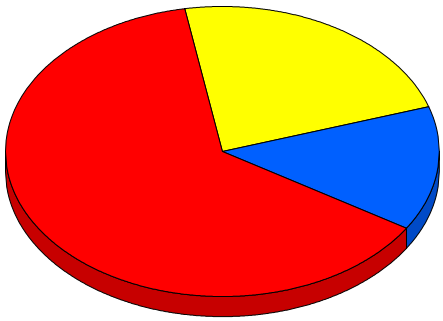
9. Review responses to Short Answer Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

10. Review written comments and look for trends. Determine whether the comments support the numerical data.

11. If needed, conduct interviews to further characterize organizational issues and strengths, and opportunities for improvement.

12. If needed, review the organization's written records and reports to determine validity of perceptions revealed by the survey and interviews.

MAKING CLIMATE ASSESSMENT RESULTS WORK FOR YOUR ORGANIZATION



1. Share the results with members of your organization.
2. Involve key leaders; let members know you are acting on their feedback.
3. If needed, establish an action team to develop and implement a plan for organizational improvement.
4. Conduct another climate assessment in accordance with your Service component directives to determine the effectiveness of the corrective actions that were taken to remedy validated perceptions.

If you or your staff requires assistance, do not hesitate to contact the DEOCS Support Team at DSN 854-2675/4217 or commercial (321) 494-2675/4217.

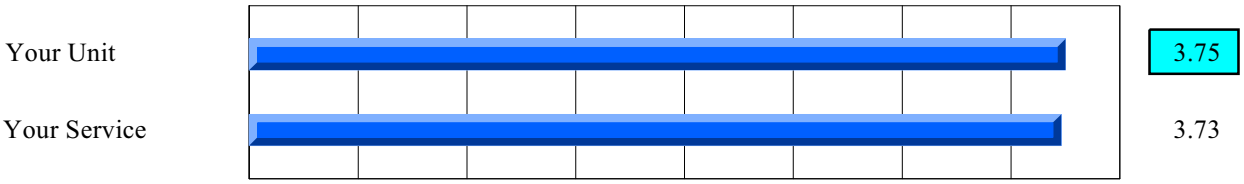
IV. SEXUAL ASSAULT PREVENTION AND RESPONSE



This section addresses members' perceptions of the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) climate within your organization. Specifically, this section includes members' perceptions of the following topic areas:

1) Perceptions of Safety
2) Chain of Command Support
3) Publicity of SAPR Information
4) Unit Reporting Climate
5) Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault
6) Unit Prevention Climate
7) Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Below you will find the overall unit summary information pertaining to the SAPR climate within your organization, compared to the DEOMI database for your Service. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. Your organization's average is displayed along with its respective Service branch average.

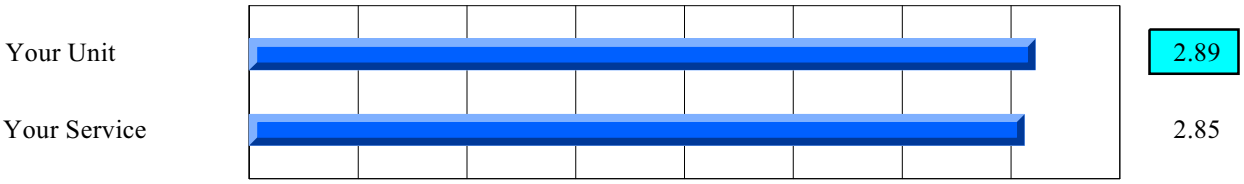
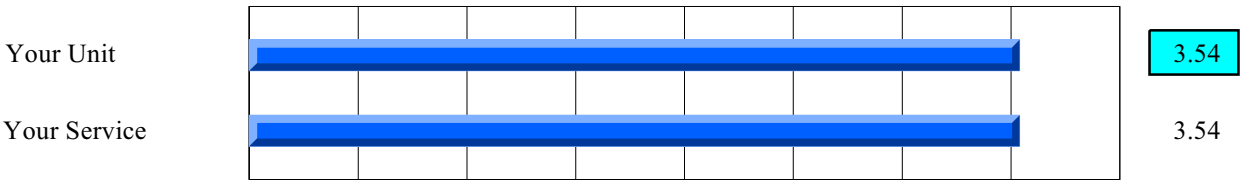
Perceptions of Safety



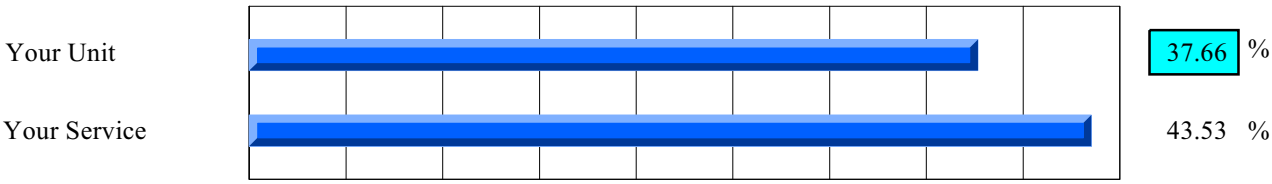
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.65 - 3.84

Chain of Command Support



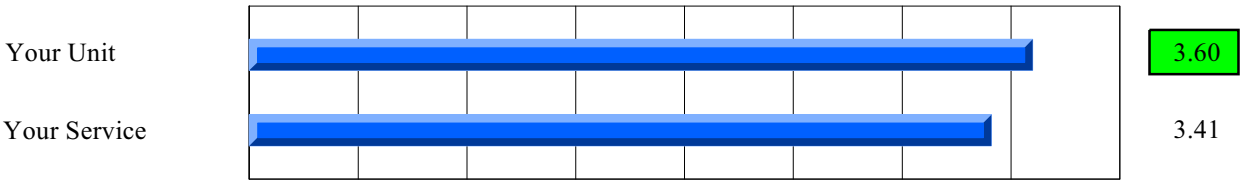
Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.35 - 3.65

Publicity of SAPR Information



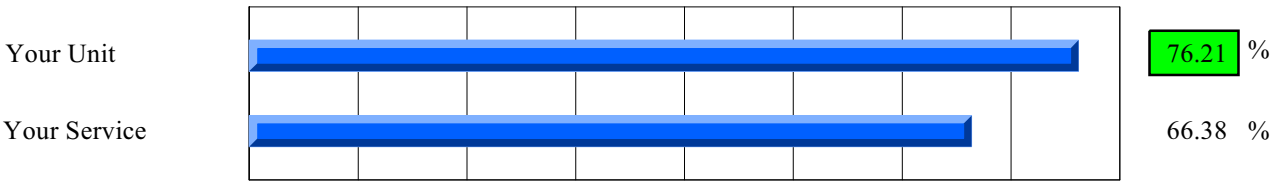
Range of "Near Service" Average = 2.69 - 3.04

Unit Reporting Climate



Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.42 - 3.69

Zero Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault



Range of "Near Service" Average = 31.88 - 54.66

Unit Prevention Climate

Range of "Near Service" Average = 3.23 - 3.58

Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Range of "Near Service" Average = 61.61 - 71.43

Perceptions of Safety

Perceptions of Safety refers to members' feelings of safety from being sexually assaulted where they currently live and perform their work/duties. Two questions measure Perceptions of Safety; each item is measured on a four-point scale, where respondents may select very unsafe, unsafe, safe, or very safe.

Table 3 displays Perceptions of Safety where individuals live, subdivided by residence and respondents' perceptions of safety where they work. The table displays the percentage of members who indicated they feel safe or very safe combined into "Safe" and displays the percentages of members who indicate they feel unsafe or very unsafe combined into "Unsafe." In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Table 3. Respondents' Perceptions of Safety

To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you currently live:	Safe		Unsafe		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
On-base/post/station	27	100.00	0	0.00	27	100.00
Off-base/post/station	437	98.65	6	1.35	443	100.00
To what extent do you feel safe from being sexually assaulted where you perform your work/duties:	460	97.87	10	2.13	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 7 displays the percentage of respondents who feel "Safe" where they live by demographic subgroups. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

While Perceptions of Safety may not necessarily reflect the actual level of risk faced by an individual or group, the reasoning behind such perceptions may yield valuable information about a number of environmental risks that pertain not only to sexual assault, but also to domestic violence, substance abuse, disruptive conditions in living quarters, and other problems that require command attention. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by residence and by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

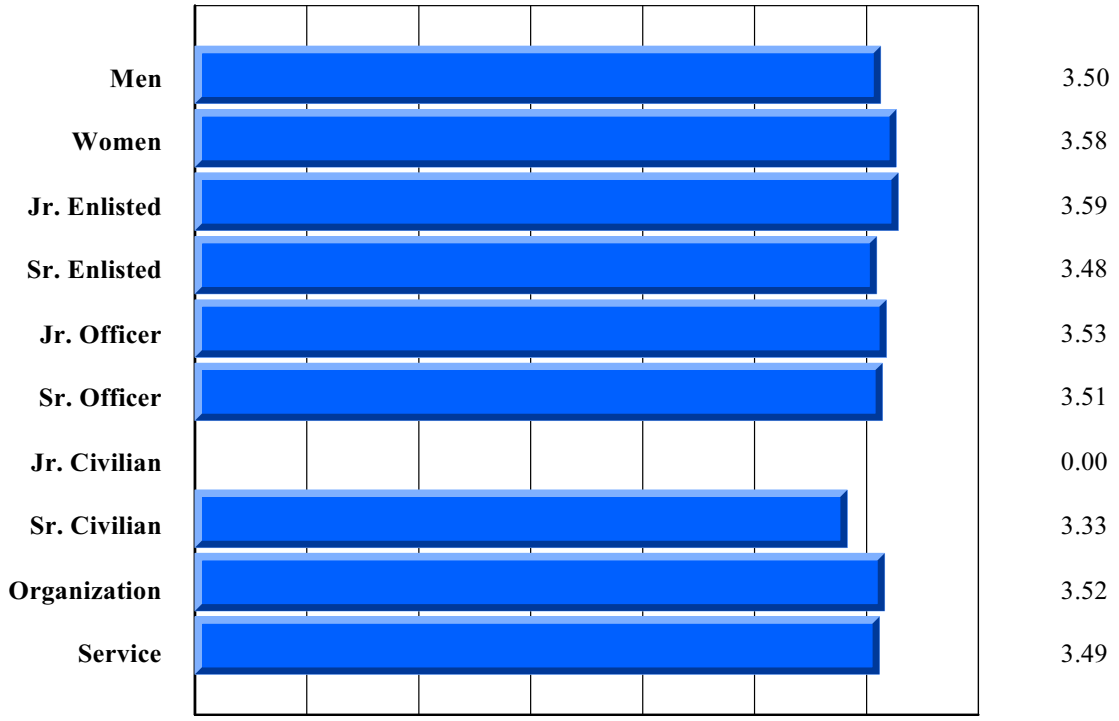
- Foster and encourage first-line supervisor involvement in the detection of potential threats and risks within your unit. About 80% of the sexual assaults within the Department of Defense occur between people that know each other. Consequently, standard physical security measures may not always address the factors that give rise to sexual assaults between co-workers, friends, and acquaintances. Well-trained and empowered first-line supervisors are likely the first to become aware of behaviors that contribute to increased risk for sexual assault and other disruptive behaviors within the unit.
- As appropriate, encourage your unit leaders to regularly visit military living quarters - especially during evenings and weekends.
- Consider contacting base law enforcement and criminal investigators to obtain local threat information, for both on- and off- base housing areas.
- Review and modify as appropriate "party" and alcohol use policies in on-base living quarters. Many interactions that lead to sexual assault begin in social settings and often involve alcohol. Such policies should promote responsible alcohol use, encourage all involved to be on the lookout for situations at risk for sexual assault, and outline how to safely address inappropriate behavior.
- Encourage professional workplace behavior and intervention against those who do not behave respectfully. Research has found that the presence of unchecked sexual harassment within a unit increases the likelihood of sexual assault within that unit. Unit leadership must not only enforce these standards but also set the example.

Chain of Command Support

Chain of Command Support refers to members' perceptions of the extent to which command behaviors are targeted towards preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where members would feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Seven questions measure Chain of Command Support; each item is measured on a four-point scale assessing extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

Table 5 displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive command behaviors to a moderate extent or a great extent. Additionally, this table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Chain of Command Support climate, meaning that they perceive the chain of command to display the positive behaviors to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 5. Respondents' Perceptions of Chain of Command Support



To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Promote a unit climate based on "respect and trust"	389	82.77	81	17.23	470	100.00
Refrain from sexist comments and behaviors	447	95.11	23	4.89	470	100.00
Actively discourage sexist comments and behaviors	441	93.83	29	6.17	470	100.00
Provide sexual assault prevention and response training that interests and engages you	399	84.89	71	15.11	470	100.00
Encourage bystander intervention to assist others in situations at risk for sexual assault or other harmful behavior	437	92.98	33	7.02	470	100.00
Encourage victims to report sexual assault	434	92.34	36	7.66	470	100.00
Create an environment where victims feel comfortable reporting sexual assault	419	89.15	51	10.85	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Chain of Command Support index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the seven Chain of Command Support questions. Figure 9 displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable Chain of Command Support. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Chain Of Command Support index provides insight into how unit members perceive leadership's behaviors related to preventing sexual assault and creating an environment where victims would feel comfortable reporting sexual assault. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on those items that get a less favorable rating. For example, if the chain of command is not seen as actively discouraging sexist comments and behaviors, clearly set your expectations with your unit leaders and consider inviting an installation resource in to help improve their skill set. Some sexist comments and behaviors may be so common practice that they escape scrutiny by those using them. Capturing a wide variety of perspectives from people within and outside your leadership chain can help you identify problem areas. Unchecked sexist comments and behaviors communicate to offenders that the unit is a place that tolerates treating someone unfairly because of their gender. This kind of climate may act as a "green light" for those who perpetrate sexual assault.
- Emphasize the importance of reporting sexual assault and getting needed assistance.
- Refrain from using the phrase "zero tolerance" on an individual unit-level. While no one should ever tolerate, condone or accept sexual assault, use of this term may have the unintended effect of keeping victims from reporting; no service member wants to be the person that shatters the commander's expectation that "zero" sexual assaults will occur in the unit. Rather, emphasize that sexual assault has no place in your unit - but if it does occur, encourage those impacted to choose one of the reporting options and get care.
- Adjust supervision policies to allow unit members to engage care and other resources without intrusive questioning. An environment that is conducive to reporting also allows victims a reasonable amount of flexibility to schedule and attend appointments for care and assistance. While personnel accountability is important, victim feedback indicates that supervisors often ask such intrusive questions about the nature of care appointments that victims sometimes forego reporting the crime and getting care so as to not attract negative attention.
- Seek out training opportunities that encourage small group discussion and active participation. "One size fits all" training rarely imparts lasting changes in knowledge, skills, and behavior. Members between the ages of 18 to 25 may be most at risk for sexual assault, but many at this age see themselves as impervious to this and other harms. Small group discussions with a mentor can help overcome such resistance and impart lasting change. Contact your servicing Sexual Assault Response Coordinator for meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.

Additional Resources:

Training materials and discussion guides that can be used in smaller groups are available at www.sapr.mil. Also, follow links on sapr.mil to your Service webpage for additional materials.

Consider attending DEOMI's Leadership Team Awareness Seminar (LTAS). Target audience for LTAS is senior officers (commanders and key staff/department heads O-3/O-6) and senior enlisted advisors (E-7/E-9) as well as civilians including legal officers, chaplains, and inspector general personnel in leadership positions. Duration of the course is 5 Days (40 hours). For more information contact: Student Management Division for enrollment into LTAS, Commercial (321)494-5653/7543 (DSN 854).

Publicity of SAPR Information

Publicity of SAPR Information refers to the extent to which members' perceive that SAPR-related information and resources is publicly displayed and openly communicated. There are three questions measuring Publicity of SAPR Information; each item is measured on a four-point scale measuring extent, where respondents may select not at all, slight extent, moderate extent, or great extent.

The following table displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there to be a favorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a moderate extent or a great extent. This table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive there is an unfavorable climate of Publicity of SAPR Information, meaning that they perceive the display of SAPR information and resources is to a slight extent or not at all.

Table 6. Respondents' Perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information

To what extent does your chain of command:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Publicize the outcomes of sexual assault cases	162	34.47	308	65.53	470	100.00
Publicize sexual assault reporting resources (e.g., Sexual Assault Response Coordinator contact information; Victim Advocate contact information; awareness posters; sexual assault hotline phone number)	413	87.87	57	12.13	470	100.00
Publicize the Restricted (confidential) Reporting option for sexual assault	374	79.57	96	20.43	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 10 provides results of the Publicity of SAPR Information index by demographic subgroups. The Publicity of SAPR Information index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all, "2" equals slight extent, "3" equals moderate extent, and "4" equals great extent, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the three publicity questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting more favorable perceptions of Publicity of SAPR Information. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00..

Recommendations:

The Publicity of SAPR Information index can provide insight about the availability of SAPR-related information and resources. Publically discussing issues surrounding sexual assault and displaying SAPR resources is an important step in decreasing the stigma associated with this crime. Communicating openly with members of your organization about sexual assault will also help to raise awareness of the issue. Use the results as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to increase the availability of these resources and information. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Publicize SAPR information to prevent sexual assaults in your unit:
  - Empower your command team to publically display SAPR information by guiding them to resources that they can utilize (see Additional Resources section below).
  - Integrate SAPR messaging into existing communication plans and publications (e.g., town halls, all hands, commander's call, newsletter, etc.).
  - Feature sexual assault related resources in unit common areas. Publicize the DoD sexual assault hotline (www.safehelpline.org) as an anonymous, free, and available worldwide 24 hours a day resource.
  - Disseminate policy letters against sexism, sexual harassment, and sexual assault.
- Publicize SAPR information in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - Take the opportunity to discuss the SAPR program, the support resources available to both victims and accused members, and prevention topics.
  - Actively discourage rumors and speculation about the allegation.
  - Consider appropriate releases of information to keep unit members informed and derail rumors. The release must consider the privacy of the victim, the accused, and the sensitivity of the matters involved. Work with your local criminal investigators and staff judge advocate to determine what can be said, when it is released, and how to communicate such information.
  - To the extent legally permissible, discuss the outcomes and disciplinary actions, if any, of sexual assault allegations.

Nationally, Sexual Assault Awareness Month (SAAM) occurs in April and commits to raising awareness and promoting the prevention of sexual violence through use of special events and public education. SAAM provides commands/installations an annual opportunity to highlight DoD and Service policies addressing sexual assault prevention and response. Unit Reporting Climate

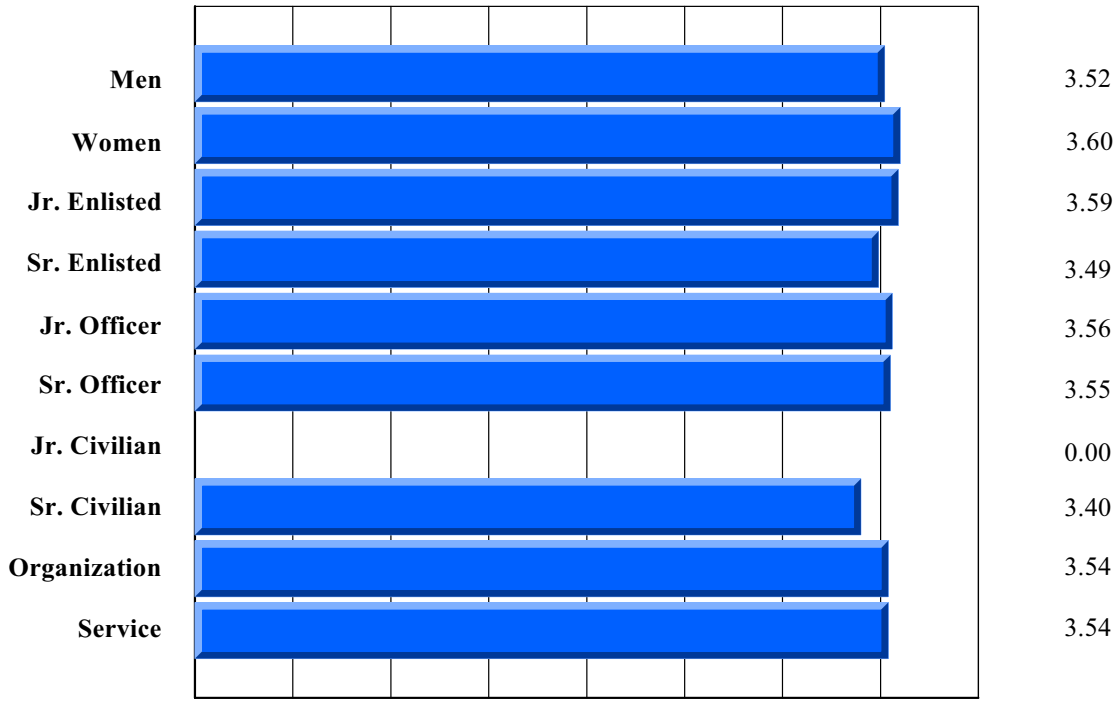
Unit Reporting Climate measures the extent to which members perceive that the chain of command would take appropriate actions to address an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault and that there would be minimal social and professional retaliation if a sexual assault was reported. Ten questions measure Unit Reporting Climate, where respondents may select not at all likely, slightly likely, moderately likely, or very likely.

Table 7 below displays the percentage of individuals who perceive a favorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they perceive individuals within the unit (chain of command or members) are moderately likely or very likely to engage in the positive Unit Reporting Climate behavior. The table also displays the percentage of individuals who perceive an unfavorable Unit Reporting Climate, meaning that they believe the individuals within the unit are slightly likely or not at all likely to engage in the positive reporting climate behavior. Within this scale, there are three questions that ask about the extent of negative behavior and are therefore reverse scored to remain consistent with a higher score being more favorable (indicated with an asterisk).

Table 7. Respondents' Perceptions of Unit Reporting Climate



If someone were to report a sexual assault to your current chain of command, how likely is it that:	Favorable		Unfavorable		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
The chain of command would take the report seriously.	450	95.74	20	4.26	470	100.00
The chain of command would keep knowledge of the report limited to those with a need to know.	432	91.91	38	8.09	470	100.00
The chain of command would forward the report outside the unit to criminal investigators.	412	87.66	58	12.34	470	100.00
The chain of command would take steps to protect the safety of the person making the report.	440	93.62	30	6.38	470	100.00
The chain of command would support the person making the report.	437	92.98	33	7.02	470	100.00
The chain of command would take corrective action to address factors that may have led to the sexual assault.	428	91.06	42	8.94	470	100.00

Unit members would label the person making the report a troublemaker (*).	405	86.17	65	13.83	470	100.00
Unit members would support the person making the report.	427	90.85	43	9.15	470	100.00
The offender(s) or their associates would retaliate against the person making the report (*).	386	82.13	84	17.87	470	100.00
The career of the person making the report would suffer (*).	401	85.32	69	14.68	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

Figure 11 provides the results of the Unit Reporting Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. The Unit Reporting Climate index is calculated by first assigning numerical values to each anchor, where "1" equals not at all likely, "2" equals slightly likely, "3" equals moderately likely, and "4" equals very likely, and then computing individuals' mean responses to the 10 Unit Reporting Climate questions. The figure below displays your unit's combined average on these questions by demographic subgroups, with higher scores reflecting a more favorable Unit Reporting Climate. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Unit Reporting Climate index can provide insight into how members perceive a report of sexual assault would be handled by the chain of command and unit members. These perceptions are important as they will likely influence members' willingness to report a sexual assault. Use the favorable and unfavorable ratings on the survey items as a guide for developing a plan of action for leadership within your unit to improve Unit Reporting Climate perceptions. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions into your plan of action for leadership.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Optimize Unit Reporting Climate to prevent sexual assault in your unit:
  - Encourage your command team to take action on those items that receive a less favorable rating. For instance, if unit members perceive that the chain of command does not take sexual assault reports seriously, follow up with unit leaders to ensure that this responsibility is not taken lightly. Service members perceive that sexual assault reports are not taken seriously when allegations are ignored, leadership at any level encourages victims to drop their report, and victims are scrutinized and blamed for getting victimized.
  - Ensure DoD and Service requirements are met with regard to case progress and updates to victims. DoD Instruction 6495.02 requires the establishment of a multi-disciplinary case management group (CMG), co-chaired by the Deputy Installation Commander and the SARC. While each Service may refer to this group by a different name (i.e., Sexual Assault Review Board, etc.), the CMG should meet monthly to review individual cases, improve reporting, facilitate monthly victim updates, and to discuss process improvements to ensure system accountability and victim access to quality services. As a commander, you must attend the monthly CMG until final disposition has been taken in the case. You are also responsible for providing monthly updates to victims of sexual assault on their case.
- Maintain a favorable Unit Reporting Climate in response to a sexual assault allegation made in your unit:
  - All sexual assault allegations that come to the chain of command's attention must be referred to a military criminal investigative organization (CID, NCIS or AFOSI). Commanders may not conduct their own internal or preliminary investigation (e.g., commander's inquiry, "15-6 investigations", etc.). Once the investigation is complete, you or a more senior commander must review the criminal investigation, evaluate the evidence with the assistance of a judge advocate, and determine any appropriate disciplinary action to be taken. If the victim and the accused are both within your unit, it is important that you should remain objective (fair and impartial) and take appropriate action based on the evidence.
  - Discourage members from participating in "barracks gossip" or grapevine speculation about the case or investigation. Remind everyone to wait until all the facts are known and final disposition of the allegation has occurred before reaching conclusions. While victims must see their allegations are taken seriously, the alleged offender is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Remind members that discussion of a possible sexual assault incident might compromise an ongoing investigation.
  - Emphasize the importance of balance in the justice system. "Choosing sides" is never fair to the parties involved, and can rip a unit apart. Supporting the victim and the accused through the military justice process does not require anyone to take a side. Rather, as a commander, you have a duty to ensure both parties (if both are under your command) are connected with appropriate services and support.

- Advise those who may have knowledge of the events leading up to or surrounding the incident to fully cooperate with any investigation involved.
- Consider some form of targeted unit refresher training; or have an outside expert address the unit regarding preventive measures, as well as some of the emotional or psychological feelings that may manifest themselves, affect the unit, and require the unit's response during the course of the investigation. It is important that unit members not see "refresher training" as a group punishment because someone reported a sexual assault. Rather, small group discussions led by knowledgeable leaders are often the most helpful.
- Continuously monitor the unit's overall climate to ensure neither the victim and/or the alleged offender is being ostracized. Prevent organizational splintering by communicating your expectations with first-line supervisors; encourage supervisors to stop rumors, monitor the formation of cliques, and communicate observed ostracism upwards. Keep in mind that sexual assault is not solely an individual-level issue; it requires a sustained systemic response because it is influenced by a wide-range of individual-, organizational-, and societal-level variables.
- Make victims aware of the option to request an expedited temporary or permanent transfer from their assigned command or base, or to a different location within their assigned command or base. Also keep in mind that alleged offenders may alternatively be moved.

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault refers to the frequency of barriers to reporting sexual assault individuals perceive within their unit/organization. Members are asked to select all that may apply from eight potential barriers, along with two additional options: "Another reason other than what is provided above" and "There are no barriers that would prevent victims from reporting a sexual assault."

The table below displays the percentage of members who perceive each barrier to reporting sexual assault.

Table 8. Respondents' Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault

In your current unit/organization, which of the following would be the most likely reasons why a victim of sexual assault would not report the incident?	Selected		Not Selected		Total
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Negative impact to career or progress.	125	26.60	345	73.40	470	100.00
Loss of privacy/confidentiality.	193	41.06	277	58.94	470	100.00
Fear of professional retaliation for making the report.	99	21.06	371	78.94	470	100.00
Fear of social retaliation for making the report.	143	30.43	327	69.57	470	100.00
Lack of confidence in the military justice system.	135	28.72	335	71.28	470	100.00
Lack of confidence in the chain of command.	115	24.47	355	75.53	470	100.00

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The figures on the following pages provide results of the Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault questions by demographic subgroups. The figures display the percentage of members that perceive zero barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 12), one to two barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 13), and three or more barriers to reporting sexual assault (Figure 14) by demographic subgroups. Taken together, these three figures represent the total group members who responded to the survey. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

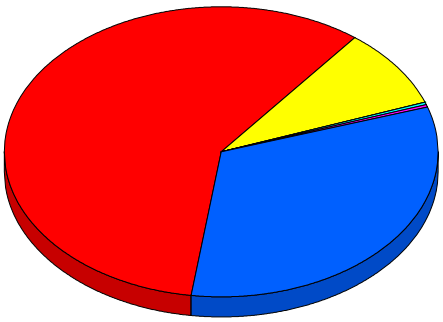
Recommendations:

Due to the nature of sexual assault crimes, victims often do not feel comfortable reporting or talking about their experience. There are steps leadership can take to reduce or eliminate these barriers which would increase the likelihood of a sexual assault being reported. The Perceived Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault question can provide insight into why members within your organization may not feel comfortable reporting a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to eliminate perceived barriers within your organization. Compare the percentage of perceived barriers within your organization to the results of your respective service. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic groups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to eliminate perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault. While you may never be able to eliminate all barriers to reporting, your work to address these concerns sends a powerful, positive message to victims.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:



- Motivate and empower your command team to take action on barriers that are frequently perceived. Have a frank discussion with members regarding these barriers and be open to members' suggestions for improvement. Take steps to clarify misperceptions and reduce concerns by demonstrating effort towards eliminating that barrier. For example, if members perceive "negative impact to career or progress" to be a barrier to reporting sexual assault within your unit, ask members why this perception exists. Inquire further about this perception and communicate procedures in place to safeguard against negative impact on career. Follow through by addressing this with your CMG to ensure members' careers and progression are not, in fact, affected by reporting a sexual assault.
- As a commander, you must carefully communicate two messages. First, sexual assault is a crime and has no place in your unit. Second, if sexual assault does occur, encourage victims to pick one of the two reporting options and seek assistance. Keep in mind that these messages must be balanced.
- Avoid statements like "zero tolerance" on an individual unit level. While this sounds effective, it actually sends a message to victims that you do not want them to come forward to report: No member wants to be the one to tell their commander that the number of known sexual assaults in the unit is no longer "zero."
- Ensure victims feel comfortable coming forward to report sexual assaults by encouraging them to do so to the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC). Stress to your members that you do not have access to identifying information about victims making Restricted Reports; this will build members' trust in your unit's SARC and Victim Advocate (VA).
- As a commander, you can strengthen member's trust in the reporting process by recommending the most qualified and trained professional to serve in critical advocacy positions.

Unit Prevention Climate (Bystander Intervention)

Unit Prevention Climate, also known as Bystander Intervention Climate, refers to individuals' intentions to act if they were to observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Unit Prevention Climate is measured with two questions; one item is situation based and asks respondents to indicate which action they would take if in a given situation. One item presents respondents with a scenario and asks at which point they would most likely intervene if they witnessed the escalating situation. A summary of the responses collected within your organization are displayed in Figure 15 through Figure 17.

Suppose you see someone secretly putting something in another person's drink. You're unsure what it was. Which of the following are you most likely to do in this kind of situation?

	Frequency	Percent
	151	32.13
	274	58.30
	42	8.94
	1	0.21
	1	0.21
	1	0.21
Total	470	100.00

Imagine you go on temporary duty for some training. The first night you go to a restaurant/bar with a large group of colleagues, whom you just met. At what point would you intervene in the following escalating situation?

	Frequency	Percent
A senior leader buys a drink for a person in the group and tells him/her a drink cannot be refused, as doing so would go against tradition.	149	31.70
The senior leader buys a second and third drink for the same person despite his/her repeated objections.	213	45.32
The person appears intoxicated and disoriented, and continues to be the senior leader's main focus of attention.	53	11.28
The senior leader repeatedly hugs the person, rubs his/her shoulders, and offers to walk him/her back to quarters.	21	4.47
You see the senior leader quietly escorting the intoxicated person out of the bar.	8	1.70
As they leave, the person resists the senior leader and says, "No."	19	4.04
In this scenario, I would not intervene at any point.	7	1.49
Total	470	100.00

[redacted]

Analyzing Responses based on Demographic Subgroups:

The Unit Prevention Climate index is the numeric composite of the two bystander intervention climate questions. Figure 17 provides the results of the Unit Prevention Climate index by demographic subgroups, with higher scores indicating more favorable responses. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Respondents were asked if they have observed a situation they believed could have led to a sexual assault within the past 12 months. Respondents' responses to this observation question are displayed in Figure 18.

In the past 12 months, I observed a situation that I believe was, or could have led to, a sexual assault.

	Frequency	Percent
Yes	4	0.85
No	466	99.15
Total	470	100.00

If respondents answered "yes" to the observation of a high risk situation question, they were prompted to identify the response that most closely resembled their actions. Figure 19 displays the responses of those who completed the question across your organization.

If yes, in response to this situation, select the response that most closely resembles your actions:

	Frequency	Percent
I stepped in and separated the people involved in the situation.	1	25.00
I asked the person who appeared to be at risk if they needed help.	0	0.00
I confronted the person who appeared to be causing the situation.	0	0.00
I created a distraction to cause one or more of the people to disengage from the situation.	2	50.00
I asked others to step in as a group and diffuse the situation.	0	0.00
I told someone in a position of authority about the situation.	1	25.00
I considered intervening in the situation, but I could not safely take any action.	0	0.00
I decided to not take action.	0	0.00
Total	4	100.00

Recommendations:

The Unit Prevention Climate index can provide insight into members' intentions to act if they observe a situation that may lead to a sexual assault. Use these results as a guide to help develop a plan of action to increase bystander intervention within your organization. Look at the frequency of responses to the hypothetical scenario questions and the prevalence of respondents observing a high risk situation question to gain an understanding of how respondents within your organization plan to intervene as well as how they have intervened in the past. Set the expectation that your people must look out for each other, both on and off the battlefield. Encourage safely stepping in to de-escalate the situation when someone looks to be at risk for sexual assault or about to perpetrate a crime. Employ training that relies on scenarios to demonstrate application of bystander prevention concepts and drive small group discussions.

Use Unit Prevention Climate index displayed by demographic subgroups to identify any differences between groups. Consider holding sensing sessions/focus groups with several members of these demographic subgroups to understand any differences in responses in your unit's results. Incorporate feedback from these sessions to help develop a plan of action for leadership to increase bystander intervention within your organization.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Promote bystander intervention by "practicing what you preach." Be an active bystander by calling out sexist remarks and sexually harassing behaviors if they are observed. When appropriate, demonstrate acceptable alternative behaviors as part of the corrective process. This will help provide the motivation and confidence necessary for members within your organization to act.
- It takes some practice and courage to intervene and discourage or stop unacceptable behavior. Teach bystander intervention strategies to motivate and empower your people to watch for questionable behavior or risky choices, take safe action to de-escalate situations, and help ensure personal safety. One approach involves emphasizing the "ABCs" of Bystander Intervention:
    - Assess for safety. Ensure that all parties are safe, and whether the situation requires calling authorities. When deciding to intervene, your personal safety should be the #1 priority. When in doubt, call for help.
    - Be with others. If it is safe to intervene, you are likely to have a greater influence on the parties involved when you work together with someone or several people. Your safety is increased when you stay with a group of friends that you know well.
    - Care for the person. Ask if the target of the unwanted sexual advance, attention, or behavior is okay. Does he or she need medical care? Does he or she want to talk to a Victim Advocate about reporting the matter? Ask if someone they trust can help them get home safely.
- Encourage your members to be receptive to messages from others indicating their behavior is not acceptable.
- Recognizing the rewarding positive personnel behavior can also be an effective strategy to increase and reinforce appropriate bystander behavior.

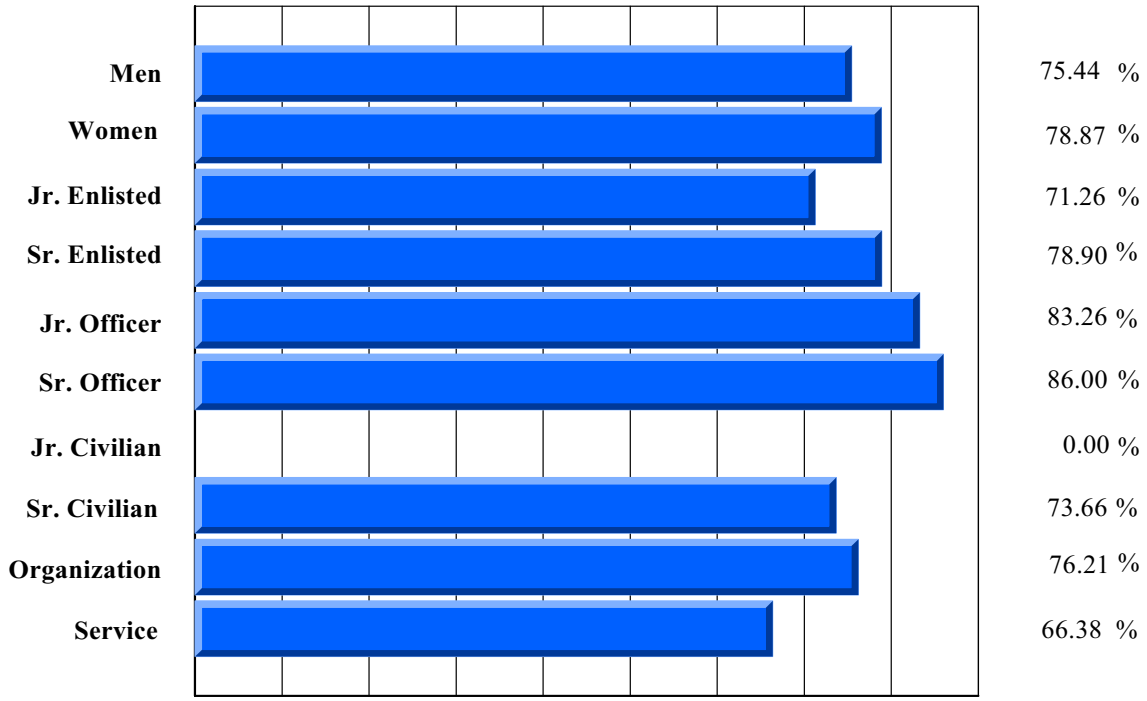
Restricted Reporting Knowledge

Knowledge of the Restricted Reporting option is assessed with one question. The item reads, "All of the following people can receive an Unrestricted Report of sexual assault. However, a Restricted (confidential) Report can only be made to certain people. Please identify which of the following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report." The Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Victim Advocate, and Military Service Healthcare Personnel can take a Restricted Report. "Anyone in my chain of command" and "Criminal investigator and Military Police Officer" are incorrect answers. These persons cannot take a Restricted Report. Table 9 displays the percentage of members within your organization who correctly and incorrectly identified who can and cannot take a Restricted Report.

Table 9. Respondents' Restricted Reporting Knowledge



Identify which of following types of people can and cannot take a Restricted Report:	Correct		Incorrect		Total

Figure 20 displays the average percentage of members who responded correctly, displayed by demographic subgroup, on the Restricted Reporting Knowledge question. The question is scored by averaging the percentage correct across the five response options of the types of people who can and cannot take a Restricted Report. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup in order to maintain respondent anonymity; that group's data will be marked with 0.00.

Recommendations:

The Department of Defense is committed to ensuring victims of sexual assault are protected; treated with dignity and respect; and provided support, advocacy, and care. The DoD also strongly supports applicable law enforcement and criminal justice procedures that enable persons to be held accountable for sexual assault offenses and criminal dispositions, as appropriate. To achieve these dual objectives, the Department's preference is for complete Unrestricted Reporting of sexual assaults to allow for the provision of victims' services and to pursue accountability. However, Unrestricted Reporting may represent a barrier for victims to access services, when the victim desires no command or law enforcement involvement. Consequently, the DoD recognizes a fundamental need to provide a confidential disclosure vehicle via the Restricted Reporting option.

A Restricted Report allows victims to experience the services and support available to them and receive information about the investigative and military justice process in a means that preserves their confidentiality. Every year, a percentage of victims convert from a Restricted Report to an Unrestricted Report to participate in the justice process. As a result, the Department makes available the Restricted Reporting as a means for victims to become knowledgeable about their legal options. As of January 2014, all Services have specially-trained attorneys to represent victims of sexual assault, regardless of which reporting option is selected. This ability to confer confidentially with an attorney about their case may also encourage more victims to participate in the military justice system.

The Restricted Reporting Knowledge score can provide insight into members' knowledge of the reporting options of sexual assault. Use the correct and incorrect responses as a guide for developing a plan of action to increase awareness and knowledge of the reporting options. Use the responses displayed by demographic subgroup to identify any differences between groups. Use this information to enhance the education and training of your personnel.

Here are additional recommendations and information to consider when developing your plan of action:

- Periodically take the opportunity to remind everyone of how to make an Unrestricted or Restricted Report. Be sure to include how to contact the Sexual Assault Response Coordinator (SARC) and Victim Advocate (VA) that service your unit or the installation.
- Emphasize that command has a legal responsibility to follow up on all allegations of sexual assault. Individuals desiring a Restricted Report should contact a SARC, VA, or medical/mental health care provider.
- Publicize that victims of sexual assault may now have an attorney represent them during the military justice process. These attorneys are assigned at the victim's request, regardless of whether a victim makes either a Restricted or Unrestricted Report. SARCs connect victims with these specialized attorneys.
- Training is an important element in sexual assault prevention and response. Provide annual training and encourage members to take this training seriously. A short slide-based training once a year is NOT sufficient to make a lasting impression on your personnel - mostly because none of them expect to become a victim of sexual assault. Contact your servicing SARC for more meaningful and impactful training formats and opportunities.
- Incorporate specific sexual assault prevention and response monitoring, measures and education into normal command training, readiness, and safety forums (e.g., quarterly training guidance, unit status reports, and safety briefings).
- Discuss your unit's DEOCS results with your installation's SARC and request that he/she conduct additional training or speak at commanders' calls.

V. CLIMATE FACTOR SUBGROUP COMPARISONS

Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Climate Overview

The following chart provides a demographic summary of the SAPR Climate variables. Results display above average, average, and below average using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively. Above average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly more favorable than the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Average indicates that the perceptions of your members are similar to that of the perceptions commonly held across your Service. Below average indicates that the perceptions of your members are markedly less favorable than those held across your Service. In cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey, you will not receive any data for that subgroup; this helps maintain respondent anonymity.

Organizational Effectiveness Factors

The following chart provides a demographic summary of the Organizational Effectiveness Factors. Results reflect climate factor averages that are Above Service Average, Near Service Average, and Below Service Average, respectively using a green, blue, and red color coding. Above Service Average: appreciably higher than your Service's average for that factor; Near Service Average: similar to those of your Service's average; Below Service Average appreciably lower than your Service's average. No data are displayed in cases where fewer than five people in a subgroup complete the survey; this helps maintain respondent anonymity.

VI. OVERALL UNIT SUMMARY

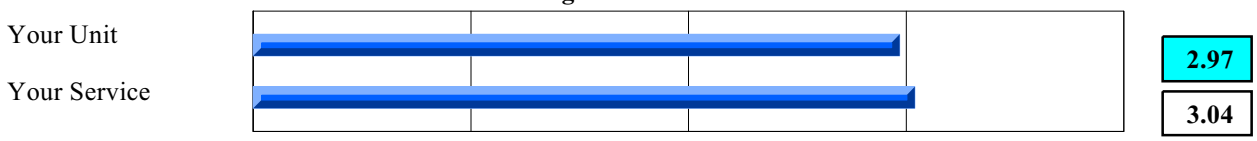
Organizational Commitment



Range of "Near Service" Average = 2.97 - 3.32

VIII. RECOMMENDATIONS

The following section provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report. Based on the data obtained, the DEOCS results for your organization may vary between organizational strengths and concerns. It is important to not only review section VII, DEOCS Summary, but to contrast that information with section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison. Appendix on Written Comments, may also help to validate some areas of concerns within sections VII and V, please ensure you review that area to determine if there are comments that speak directly to any areas of concern.

This section also seeks to provide guidance for additional steps in the climate assessment effort, and prescribe actions to help address organizational concerns.

Share positive results with the organization's members. Compare subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions of climate factors are prevalent among specific groups, and the sources of those perceptions.

Seek to identify-and reinforce-those practices and programs currently in place.

Reinforce behaviors that create a climate of inclusion, supporting and preserving the dignity and worth of all members.

Continue to promote and maintain a healthy human relations climate. This can be done by ensuring all members in the unit understand their roles and responsibilities.

Share positive results to enhance members' commitment to the organization and its mission.

Consider utilizing training aids to further provide awareness and knowledge regarding key factors.

Below Average

It is important to note that some or all of the three lowest averages may actually be comparable to your respective Service averages, and not necessarily represent a negative finding. If any of these averages appear appreciably lower than your Service average, they should be treated as an organizational concern. In cases where low averages, compare the demographic subgroups to determine whether diminished perceptions are more obvious among specific groups.

After identifying the specific climate factors with low averages and those demographic subgroups that harbor negative perceptions regarding them, use these findings to plan follow-on assessment efforts, including focus groups, interviews, and written record reviews. Conducting focus groups and interviews can help determine the source and extent of specific perceptions.

Develop an action plan and socialize the plan with members. Set a timeline for the action items designed to address each specific validated concern, and provide timely feedback on progress accomplishing them. This will demonstrate your willingness to listen to your subordinates, and take action to improve conditions when possible.

It is important to review all sections contained in this report. Compare the information presented in Section III, Perceptions of Discrimination, Section V, Climate Factor Subgroup Comparison, along with Appendix, Written Comments from Your Organization. Doing so can sometimes help to validate potential areas of concern.

I. HOW TO INTERPRET YOUR DEOCS RESULTS

1. Start by looking at the demographic breakout in Part II, which shows who completed the survey. The charts provide a visual display of respondents by their demographic features. Survey respondents can select any option when completing the demographic portion of the survey, so numbers may not match the personnel assigned. Determine if the participants represent the overall assigned population.

2. Review section III, Perceptions of Discrimination. This shows perceptions of these incidents in the workplace during the past 12 months, actions taken to address them, and members' satisfaction with issue resolution.

3. Review section IV, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR). This covers perceptions of leadership support, knowledge of sexual assault reporting options, perceived barriers to reporting sexual assault, and bystander intervention climate.

4. Review section V, which provides climate factor results broken out by demographic subgroup, facilitating direct comparison between complementary groups. Higher averages reflect more positive ratings. Results are displayed using a green, blue, and red coding scheme, respectively reflecting above average, average, and below average.

5. Review section VI, Overall Unit Summary. This provides a comparative analysis for each of the factor areas, comparing your unit's current average with its parent Service branch. Results are displayed using the same color coding scheme.

6. Review section VII, which shows responses to the individual climate factor questions

7. Review section VIII, which shows provides interpretation and recommendations for the DEOCS report.

8. Review responses to Locally Developed Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

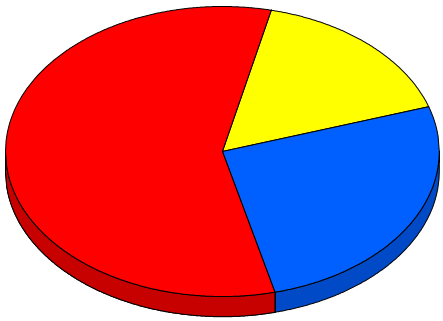
9. Review responses to Short Answer Questions (if you chose to include these in your survey).

10. Review written comments and look for trends. Determine whether the comments support the numerical data.

11. If needed, conduct interviews to further characterize organizational issues and strengths, and opportunities for improvement.

12. If needed, review the organization's written records and reports to determine validity of perceptions revealed by the survey and interviews.

MAKING CLIMATE ASSESSMENT RESULTS WORK FOR YOUR ORGANIZATION



1. Share the results with members of your organization.
2. Involve key leaders; let members know you are acting on their feedback.
3. If needed, establish an action team to develop and implement a plan for organizational improvement.
4. Conduct another climate assessment in accordance with your Service component directives to determine the effectiveness of the corrective actions that were taken to remedy validated perceptions.

If you or your staff requires assistance, do not hesitate to contact the DEOCS Support Team at DSN 854-2675/4217 or commercial (321) 494-2675/4217.
